Level the Jobsite: Why the World Needs More Women in Construction

[Article was originally posted on blog.plangrid.com]

By Grace Ellis,

The construction workforce is evolving in many positive ways, especially as it actively embraces diversity and technology. Nevertheless, it remains one of the most male-dominated industries in the world. Out of the over 10 million construction workers in the US, a little less than one million are female. Even more unbalanced is when you look at the percentage of female construction laborers actually in the field; 1%. That's right.

So, why the lack of women in construction? A career in construction offers plenty of opportunities and benefits, but it's a long ways away from balancing the male to female ratio. While it's easy to blame factors like lack of sufficient education and promotion from apprenticeship programs and universities to encourage women to enter the field, there's not just one thing that contributes to the lack of females in the profession. Recruitment bias, company cultures where harassment isn't thoroughly addressed and even reasons as simple as tools and gear not made for women in mind, also all play a critical role into why more women aren't considering building as a career. Nonetheless, if it takes a village to build up anything meaningful, likewise, it will take a comprehensive commitment from individuals, companies, schools and governments to truly balance the workforce for the better.

In addition to supporting gender equality from a human rights and diversity inclusion perspective, attracting and retaining more women in the construction workforce has major economic benefits. In fact, according to the Peterson Institute, companies who were in the top 25% in gender diversity of their workforce were 46% more likely to outperform their industry average.

Women in Construction: A Global Problem

Only 9.1% of women compose the construction workforce in the US, and it is far from an individual country issue. In the UK, women only compose approximately 12.4% of the country's construction workforce. In Canada,

Construction industry launches campaign to diversify national workforce

[Article was originally posted on www.archpaper.com]

By Ali Oriaku,

The Associated General Contractors of America (AGC), a group that represents thousands of construction workers and contracting firms nationwide, is launching a campaign to diversify its predominantly white and male workforce. Stephen Sandherr, the CEO of the AGC, announced his plans to introduce professional construction training to high school students in an attempt to attract more minorities and women to the trade in order to better reflect America's evolving and increasingly diverse workforce, according to The New York Daily News.

According to the AGC, very few minorities and women enter the construction industry due to their lack of familiarity with it, therefore the business is overwhelmingly white and male. By familiarizing high schoolers and college students with vocational training, some of which will be paid for by the AGC itself, the association hopes to boost the diversity of the industry.

The group also hopes to attract more skilled workers in general to the stagnant industry, where nearly 80 percent of employers claim to lack experienced or qualified contractors, according to a recent AGC survey.

But critics say that this new initiative could prevent poor and minority students from attending college or learning the professional skills necessary to build a business in the trade.

While the AGC has launched previous initiatives aimed toward bringing minorities and women into the construction workforce, few have made a substantial impact. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, women composed about 9 percent of the 2017 U.S. construction workforce, with the number of Asians at 2 percent, African Americans at 6 percent, and Hispanics at almost 30 percent.

Los Angeles County Supervisor Solis, County Departments, and Partners Launch New East Los Angeles Entrepreneur Center

Los Angeles County Supervisor Hilda L. Solis and the Department of Consumer and Business Affairs (DCBA) joined government, community, and legal partner agencies on Wednesday to celebrate the grand opening of the East Los Angeles Entrepreneur Center.

The Center, operated by DCBA's Office of Small Business, is a one-stop business development hub to assist prospective and existing business owners to successfully open and grow their businesses. The East L.A. Entrepreneur Center will feature a multitude of services, available in English and Spanish, including business start-up assistance and resources; business development workshops; access to capital; information about navigating permits and licenses; one-on-one business counseling; and succession planning.

The newly constructed center located at Centro Maravilla, 4716 East Cesar E. Chavez Avenue, Building B, in East Los Angeles, represents a substantial Los Angeles County investment in the East L.A. business community. Supervisor Solis and others participated in a ribbon-cutting ceremony to welcome business owners and entrepreneurs to the new center.

"Small businesses and entrepreneurs keep our regional economy strong. Entrepreneurship improves productivity, spurs innovation, and creates local jobs," said First District Supervisor Hilda L. Solis. "The Entrepreneur Center at Centro Maravilla, located in the heart of East Los Angeles, will offer businesses resources to build capital, recruit a trained local workforce, avoid displacement, and ensure that local dollars stay within the community. We all win when we support and empower our small businesses, micro-enterprises, and emerging entrepreneurs."

"The East Los Angeles community is a flourishing sector for small businesses, and we are dedicated to helping those businesses thrive," said Joseph M. Nicchitta, DCBA Director. "We are proud of the Board of Supervisors' efforts and investment in this community and look forward to providing top-notch service at a convenient location. And we applaud our colleagues at Workforce Development, Aging, and Community Services for welcoming the center to their building."

The East L.A. Entrepreneur Center will include services and support provided by:

- L.A. County Office of Small Business, part of the Department of Consumer and Business Affairs; dcba.lacounty.gov
- L.A. County Workforce Development, Aging and Community Services (WDACS); wdacs.lacounty.gov

- L.A. County Department of Regional Planning (DRP); planning.lacounty.gov

Business Toolkit

It's Data Privacy Day: How To Make Your Business More Secure

As a business owner, you are responsible for taking good care of your customers' data all year long. But since the January 28th is Data Privacy Day, it can be a good reason to review your current situation and strengthen the protection.

Be Up To Date

You should start from the ground up by taking care of all the software you use. Update your operating system, web browser, and security software. Any of them can become a backdoor to your information if they aren't set up correctly. It would be best to check them regularly to be sure that everything is up to date. To be consistent, you can even set up bi-monthly check-up reminders.

Safe Website Is A Must

A business website should be on top of your "take care" list. Especially if people are registering, making purchases, or putting other private information on it. To be sure, that people's data is safe, use an SSL certificate. SSL is an acronym for Secure Sockets Layer. It makes communication between a website server and a visitor computer safer by encrypting it.

If your website offers products or services to buy, an SSL certificate can do both: protect your customers and boost your sales. Arnas Stuoepelis, Chairman of the Board of hosting provider Hostinger, says: "When your website doesn't have an SSL certificate, Chrome browser shows a "Not secure" line next to the address. And it's a big red flag for online shoppers." By protecting your website and people's data, you are strengthening the trustworthiness of your business.

Take Only What You Need

When you have a safe website, people see your business as trustworthy, and they feel protected when entering their private data on your website. But even though you have their trust, ask only for the information you need. The more information you collect, the bigger the target for cyber-attack you might become.

Double Check Access

If there are at least several employees in your business, you should control how much information they can attain. Not every employee needs to have access to all business information. Check people's functions and give only the data required to do their jobs.

In addition to that, Forbes suggests to "train on awareness and practices and keep that education up to date. Share the latest trends in attacks and fraud. Consider drills or exercises that give employees a chance to act before an actual attack happens."

Access to Capital

Ready to Grow Your Business?

Why a Business Line of Credit May Be a Smart Choice for Your Business

[Article was originally posted on www.sba.gov]

By Marco Carbajo,

As a business owner, you probably already know access to working capital is the lifeblood of a business. Alexander Graham Bell said, “before anything else, preparation is the key to success.”

So, it’s essential to be proactive and ready to deal with any unforeseen expenses in order to keep the business afloat. One way you can accomplish this is to get a line of credit for your business.

When it comes to business credit, there are various options to consider. A business line of credit is a preferred choice among small business owners for obvious reasons.

To qualify for a line of credit, traditional banks typically require good personal credit and a two-year track record of business history with healthy revenue.

Alternative lenders offer a faster and easier application and approval process but the interest rates are slightly higher. With alternative lenders, a business with healthy revenues can still qualify even if the applicant’s credit score is in the 500+ range.

You can apply for a business line of credit at your local bank or with an alternative lender. A line of credit can be either secured or unsecured. You can secure a line of credit with your assets or other form of security such as a certificate of deposit.

A business line of credit is more economical compared to other types of financing such as a term loan or merchant cash advance. Once the line of credit is established, you can draw funds from it by making a direct deposit into your business checking account, or by using a convenience check linked to the credit line account.

Similar to a line of credit, a business credit card is another option that may be a smart choice especially for startups or businesses with a minimal track record. Business credit cards are a different type of financial instrument than a line of credit, but there are advantages to using them.

For example, with a line of credit you have the ability to write checks to pay billers that don’t accept credit cards. In addition, there are no cash advance fees associated with lines of credit compared to business credit cards.

However, business credit cards offer a much easier application process and qualification requirements compared to a line of credit. You can also receive rewards for your business in the form of points, miles, and cash back.

Before you make a decision it's important to check your business's qualifications first. You'll save time and effort by knowing where your business stands prior to applying.

To start, order a copy of your personal credit reports and scores. Once you know where your scores are, you'll be able to rule out lenders that have minimum score requirements that you do not qualify for.

How long have you been in business? Generally, the longer you are in business the less risk in the eyes of a lender. Traditional banks typically require a minimum of two years in business. Whereas, alternative lenders have a much shorter time requirement ranging from six months to one year in business.

Additionally, review your company's annual revenues. Some lenders have a minimum requirement for annual revenues that must be met in order to qualify for a line of credit. If you don't meet the revenue requirement for a specific lender, then don't apply.

Finally, assess what kind of collateral you can offer since you may be required to secure the line of credit. Keep in mind, not all lenders require physical collateral. They may just require that you sign a personal guarantee.

Once you have evaluated your company's qualification and where you stand, you're ready to explore your options. By assessing your situation, you'll be able to narrow down your options and find the ideal business line of credit to apply for. No matter which option you consider, one of the most important tools for your business is access to business credit.

fewer women are even beginning their careers in construction—only 11% of women composing new apprenticeship training registrants in inter-provincially recognized Red Seal skilled trades. In Australia, since 12% of the construction workforce are women and leave the trade 39% faster than men, it has been cited by the Sydney Morning Herald as "the last frontier for women at work."

In some countries, the construction workforce gender balance is more equal. Nonetheless, other serious inequalities have not been addressed. For instance, in Cambodia, one in three construction workers are female. Despite doing the same hard work, these women are often paid around half of what their male counterparts make.

The Gender Pay Gap in Construction: A Deceptive Number

While the 95.7% US gender pay gap in construction is narrower than the nationwide average of approximately 80%, numbers can be deceiving. The truth is, women of color (as well as men of color) are more impacted by the pay gap when compared with their white male counterparts. This exists in practically all major industries and construction is far from an exception. Just a few statistics to chew on:

- On average, black women earn $0.81 for every $1.00 paid to white, non-Hispanic men working as construction laborers.
- For Hispanic women in construction-related occupations, this pay gap is even greater, where they make 71.7% of Hispanic men's and only 50.4% of white men's earnings in the field.

In actuality, construction companies need to be more diligent about closing the pay gap not only by gender but also by addressing equal pay policies across also race, age and education level. Without a commitment to level the playing field across all demographics, the gap will further discourage diverse talent from entering and benefiting the industry.

Promote and Prosper: A Need for More Women in Leadership Positions

The building industry has a great deal of improvement it can make to support women in leadership positions. Although more women are needed at all job levels in construction, significant change is most likely to come from the top down. As mentioned above, more women in the workforce, especially in leadership and management positions, is beneficial for a company's profits. Furthermore, a paper from the National Bureau of Economic Research also highlights that more women in leadership are helpful for a company's overall collaboration because women are more likely to work cooperatively than men. As construction professionals already know, projects require a high-level of collaboration in order to be successful, and adding individuals with an affinity towards this type of communication can only improve your overall workforce productivity.

Discouragingly, expectations for women in leadership, in general, is low. In fact, 1 in 4 Americans believes it's more likely humans will colonize on Mars than that half of Fortune 500 CEOs will be women. However, while only around 13% of construction firms are women-owned, out of this small percentage, 9% of these firms achieve revenues of over $500,000 or more. When compared to the 8% of all firms achieving this threshold, it's clear that women in leadership are making a huge impact on profitability for companies.

Support Women in Construction Today

Supporting and encouraging women in construction is easier said than done, with a big "how" missing from the equation. Nonetheless, an active commitment to education and recruitment in addition to an open conversation to balance the workforce and narrow the pay gap from thought-leaders, companies and institutions are important places to begin. In our infographic above, we've shared several of the top associations for women in construction. These professional organizations are great stepping stones for women looking to connect and leverage the efforts of others in the field. Furthermore, industry-events like Groundbreaking Women in Construction, Women in Construction Summit and NAWIC Annual Conference are also important podiums to support and amplify female voices in the industry.

It's Data Privacy Day

Data Back Up's

One of the ways hackers try to cash in during attacks is by hacking your business information, blocking it, and asking for money to get it back. You can prevent this by backing up all the essential business information. If the attack happens, it still can be inconveniencing, but at least you will know that you are able to restore everything you need from your back up storage.

Take Care Of Business Smartphones

When taking care of all those technical aspects of your business, don't forget the smartphones. Nowadays a phone is as important as a computer, but without proper care, it can be way more vulnerable than a computer.

Pew report states that nearly 30% of smartphone owners don't use a screen lock. But smartphones have a lot of sensitive data: logged-in accounts, credit card data, access to clients' information. A screen lock is vital if you leave your business phone unattended, or it gets stolen.

Data safety is a year-round matter but take this Data Privacy Day as an opportunity to double-check current business ant clients' data safety. Make sure that your software is up to date. Take care of your business website. An SSL certificate is the least you should do.

Be sure that you collect only the necessary data. Let your employees access only the data required to do their jobs. Data backup can prevent you from ransom situations. And don't forget to take care of the business phone since a lot of sensitive information can be accessed through it.
