4 Construction Technology Trends to Watch in 2021

[Article was originally posted on Autodesk Construction Cloud Blog. <https://construction.autodesk.com>]

By Sumit Oberoi,

This year will be a year like no other for the construction industry, with the landscape evolving rapidly in a post-COVID world and technology set to support innovation and operational efficiencies for businesses in increasingly important ways.

The adoption of technology is accelerating due to both demand and necessity, with construction businesses across Asia Pacific managing old and new challenges. These include evolving safety and distancing requirements; supporting remote workers; ever-changing operational, supplier and project management needs; and a renewed focus on the environment with increased sustainability across project lifecycles.

Technology will support the construction industry in elevating all these factors, enabling better integration across the different phases of the construction model towards a new way of operating. This will help to create safer and more productive workplaces, a more resilient sector, and upskilling of the workforce.

I anticipate we'll also see the efficient use of any government COVID-19 stimulus funds being invested in innovation to improve operations including procurement, construction and facility management.

Here are four construction technology trends to watch in 2021:

1. Subcontractor management platforms will increase in popularity.

To date, much of the construction industry across Asia Pacific has widely adopted construction point solutions to address basic needs and to engage and manage subcontractors across their projects, creating operational inefficiencies and potentially costly development delays. Construction management platforms will emerge post COVID-19 for head contractors and specialist contractors to manage business requirements through a seamless integration and aggregation of design and field data to control the process. The right subcontract management platform will enable the industry to move from fragmented, project-centric internal platforms in their businesses to strong internal platforms with a more standardised and integrated approach.

A Proclamation on Women's History Month, 2021

[Article was originally posted on www.whitehouse.gov]

Each year, Women's History Month offers an important opportunity for us to shine a light on the extraordinary legacy of trailblazing American women and girls who have built, shaped, and improved upon our Nation.

Throughout American history, women and girls have made vital contributions, often in the face of discrimination and undue hardship. Courageous women marched for and won the right to vote, campaigned against injustice, shattered countless barriers, and expanded the possibilities of American life. Our history is also replete with examples of the unflinching bravery and grit of women in America, particularly in times of crisis and emergency. Women served our Nation during World War II, led organizing and litigation efforts during the Civil Rights movement, and represented the United States on the global stage in the fight for human rights, peace, and security. Far too often, their heroic efforts and their stories have gone untold — especially the millions of Black women, immigrant women, and others from diverse communities who have strengthened America across every generation.

In our current moment of crisis, women continue to lead. From vaccine researchers to public health officials to the countless heroines on the frontlines, women are working around the clock to defeat COVID-19. Women, and particularly women of color, also make up the majority of America's essential workers, including educators and child care providers, grocery store workers, farmworkers, and others who are keeping our families, our communities, and our country afloat. This year has also marked an historic milestone of women's leadership 232 years in the making, with the inauguration of America's first woman Vice President.

As we celebrate the contributions and progress of women and girls, we must also reflect on the extraordinary and unequal burdens they continue to bear today. The COVID-19 pandemic has exacerbated barriers that have held back women — particularly women of color — for generations. Gender and racial disparities in pay continue to fester. A disproportionate share of caregiving continues to fall on the shoulders of women and girls. And now, job losses due to COVID-19 have set women's labor force participation back to its lowest point in more than 30 years — threatening the security and well-being of women and their families and imperiling the economic progress of our entire Nation. The share of mothers who have left the labor force is three times that of fathers; in September 2020 alone, an astonishing 865,000 women dropped out of the American workforce. These trends are even more dire among women of color, with Black and Hispanic women facing disproportionately high rates of unemployment. At the same time, food insecurity has risen dramatically since the pandemic began, particularly in female-headed households with children, as have reports of intimate partner violence.

Since taking office on January 20th, Vice President Kamala Harris and I have made COVID-19 vaccination, relief, and broad-based economic recovery efforts a top priority. Our goal is not to return our economy to where it was before the pandemic struck. Our goal is to build back better — and that means creating a strong and durable foundation for the economic opportunity and security of women in America. Our plans include proposals to provide individual payments and

With raffles, food sales and fundraisers, Latinos do their best to avoid debt

[Article was originally posted on www.calmatters.org]

by Araceli Martinez Ortega, CalMatters,

When Claudia Badillo began to accumulate debts after she lost her house cleaning job when the pandemic hit, she decided to sell food.

“I invited a friend who is good at cooking and we agreed that she would cook and I would take care of the sales and deliver orders,” Badillo said. “We would distribute the profits equally.”

The preparation and sale of Central American food kept Badillo from falling into a spiral of debt. “The first few months before I sold food, my children and my friends were lending me (money) to pay the rent, utility bills, car insurance and tuition at the cosmetology school I attend,” Badillo said.

Without a job during the health crisis, many families have turned to credit cards or borrowing from family and friends to pay their bills. Some have turned to online fundraisers or pooled resources. Others have sought to reduce their expenses by asking to make smaller payments on car loans or career-education courses. Badillo says that her cosmetology school lowered her monthly payment from $400 to $250.

Debt deferral

A recent congressional report found that the $2 trillion CARES Act economic aid package, along with other debt deferral programs and enhanced unemployment benefits, have helped prevent many consumers from defaulting on their debts. However, as the pandemic drags on, it’s not clear what will happen to consumer debt in the future.

Rigoberto Barboza, a former Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals recipient who is now a permanent resident, was forced to close his travel agency, “Navega Travel Tours and Cruises” in La Puente in Los Angeles County.

At the beginning of the pandemic, he worked from home in hopes that the economy would re-open quickly, but as the pandemic spread, he was forced to close. With no income, he dipped into savings and maxed out his credit cards. With a wife and a son, Barboza didn’t see a better option but to enlist in the National Guard.

“My training begins in March, but from the first day they are going to start paying me, which will allow me to get ahead with my expenses and pay my debts,” he said.

By December, unemployment among Latinos was even higher than the national average, 9.3% versus 6.7%, according to the most recent report from the organization UnidosUS, formerly the National Council of La Raza.

That’s twice the 4% unemployment rate before the pandemic.

Food sale

Mayra Todd, an activist and leader of Mujeres de Hoy, a Los Angeles organization that helps women victims of domestic violence, says many unemployed immigrants have reached out for money-making ideas in the pandemic.

“My first question was: What can you do,” Todd said. “Most of them know how to cook, and I suggest they should plan to start selling food.”

Her organization has supported women with equipment, which has allowed them to sell fruit or vegetable juices. Others have started a pastry business selling cupcakes.

Todd also has organized countless fundraising campaigns for unemployed families. “We raise money through the different applications and online sites that exist,” she says.

Vernon Jordan, Civil Rights Activist And Power Broker, Dies At 85

Civil right leader and advisor to many U.S. presidents Vernon Jordan

[Article was originally posted on www.npr.org]

Vernon Jordan, the civil rights lawyer who built a career as a power broker in politics and business, has died at age 85.

Jordan “passed away peacefully last evening surrounded by loved ones,” his daughter, Vickee Jordan, said in a statement sent to NPR. “We appreciate all of the outpouring of love and affection.”

A native of Atlanta, Jordan attended DePauw University before earning his law degree at Howard University. Soon after graduating, he devoted himself to ending discrimination against Black Americans in the fight for equal rights. In 1992-93, he chaired President Bill Clinton’s transition team, and for decades he remained a friend and adviser to Bill and Hillary Clinton.

Jordan played an important role in desegregating education in the South, particularly at the college level. In the early 1960s, he became the Georgia field director for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and he famously helped escort Charlayne Hunter through a crowd of white protesters at the University of Georgia in 1961.

“An icon to the world and a lifelong friend to the NAACP, his contribution to moving our society toward justice is unparalleled,” NAACP President and CEO Derrick Johnson said, noting that his organization had honored Jordan for his lifetime of activism.

“His exemplary life will shine as a guiding light for all that seek truth and justice for all people,” Johnson said.

Reflecting on the arc of civil rights in his lifetime, Jordan once compared watching Nelson Mandela walking free from prison in South Africa to seeing Barack Obama being declared president-elect of the U.S.

Ready to Grow Your Business?

The 5 Best Business Construction Loans for Your Building Company

[Article was originally posted on www.fundera.com]

By Meredith Wood,

Business construction loans are small business loans that cover hefty construction expenses, including materials, on-site facilities, temporary machine parts, and wages for crew members. But with all the available small business loans—short-term loans, bank loans, invoice financing—which is right for your construction company?

Our list of best construction business loans will streamline your research. These loans will suit various stages of your construction company's growth, so you can choose based on your company's age, size, and loan eligibility.

1. Equipment Financing

Best for: New businesses

No matter what type of project your construction company hopes to undertake, it's pretty much a given that you'll need equipment—and lots of it—to carry out the job. But even a single piece of equipment is expensive, meaning newer construction companies might not have the funds available to finance all the tools they need to get themselves off the ground.

Your business construction loan solution is equipment financing. With an equipment loan, you come to a lender with a quote, and if you're approved, they front you 80% to 100% of the cash you need to purchase the equipment.

Like a traditional term loan, you'll repay your lender in regular installments, usually on a monthly basis. The life of your loan depends on how long the lender anticipates that the equipment you're borrowing against is useful and valuable.

What really sets this type of loan apart from many of the other business loans you might know about, however, is that your lender uses the equipment itself as collateral. That means if you fail to repay your loan, the lender will seize that equipment to satisfy their debt.

That baked-in collateral mitigates the lender's risk. They're guaranteed to be repaid if you default, whether that's through your agreed-upon repayment, or by repossessing the equipment.

Since this is a relatively low-risk business construction loan scenario, lenders aren't so concerned with working strictly with low-risk businesses—i.e., established businesses with years' worth of evidence of profitability and good credit scores. So, it's a little easier for newer construction companies to qualify for equipment loans.

2. Business Lines of Credit

Best for: Growing businesses

Think of a business line of credit a bit like a business credit card, but without the actual card and without the rewards that usually accompany a credit card. Essentially, your lender gives your construction company access to a renewable pool of capital, with an amount they determine tax credits to put money in the hands of families in need; increase housing and food assistance as well as unemployment insurance; lower health costs and expand access to coverage; increase support for and access to child care; and expand existing paid leave policies. We are also committed to making further progress on what, for me, has been a lifelong cause: reducing gender-based violence, and advancing the safety, economic stability, and well-being of survivors.

Sixty years ago, when former First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt confronted President John F. Kennedy about the lack of women in Government, he appointed her as head of a new commission to address the status of women in America and take on discrimination in all of its forms. We have made significant progress in the United States, thanks to the persistence and tireless work of countless women. I am proud that the White House Gender Policy Council will build on those efforts by putting a laser focus on the needs and contributions of women and girls, and ensuring a Government-wide focus on gender equity. Our Administration is also committed to ensuring that women are well-represented at all levels in the executive branch: already, we have selected a record number of women who represent the diversity of America to serve in Cabinet-level positions.

During Women's History Month, let us honor the accomplished and visionary women who have helped build our country, including those whose contributions have not been adequately recognized and celebrated. And let us pay tribute to the trailblazers from the recent and distant past for daring to envision a future for which no past precedent existed, and for building a Nation of endless possibilities for all of its women and girls.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOSEPH R. BIDEN JR., President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim March 2021 as Women's History Month. I call upon all Americans to observe this month and to celebrate International Women's Day on March 8, 2021, with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities. I also invite all Americans to visit www.WomensHistoryMonth.gov to learn more about the vital contribution of women to our Nation's history.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this first day of March, in the year of our Lord two thousand twenty-one, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and forty-fifth.

JOSEPH R. BIDEN JR.

This will enable an improvement in margins and increased understanding of real project costs.

In 2021, we'll likely also see increasing take up of software that enables preconstruction teams to quickly solicit bids with customisable templates and compare them side-by-side; track internal budgets with real-time cost updates; easily and transparently collaborate with other estimators and owners on the team; and gain valuable insight into historical bid data and reports to optimise for future projects.

2. Streamlined workflows across entire construction projects will improve efficiencies.

The COVID-19 pandemic has seen much of the industry working and collaborating remotely, and it's evident that some degree of remote working will continue for most companies. This alone has created the need for technology to enable new processes, policies and workflows across projects. Digital infrastructure projects are also set to grow as digitisation accelerates due to remote working.

In addition, companies are more cost-conscious than ever and are looking at ways to improve and develop efficiencies to remain competitive.

Technology is supporting streamlined workflows in this new era of convergence where industries, processes and teams are embracing innovative ways of making and have new challenges. In 2021, teams, data and workflows will be increasingly connected.

Streamlined workflows will be made possible through software such as Autodesk Construction Cloud; an integrated cloud-based platform for the management of construction projects. It offers a single platform to store all data, connecting workflows throughout the different stages of a project, from design to operations. It removes the barriers of disconnection and uncertainty that plague construction projects of all sizes and dramatically increases the depth, breadth and connectivity of the products teams are already using today.

3. Safety will be at the forefront of construction business strategy.

In construction, safety has always been a concern but in today's environment it is paramount.

Workers must be separated and socially distanced to reduce potential spreading of the virus, while cleanliness and additional safety processes and procedures are required. On a construction site, where teams generally work together, social distancing can be difficult to achieve.

Technologies such as simulation or generative design can help support companies to identify the right safety processes to implement, and how they can reimagine spaces when it comes to physical distancing and reducing the potential for virus transmission. Generative design is backed with analytical data that includes constraints like social distancing, epidemiologic criteria or air flow in a space.

4. Accessing 3D models with data in the field will provide a benefit for project teams and customers.

Design technology such as 3D modelling – or more specifically, Building Information Modelling (BIM) – has been growing in popularity for the construction industry since before the pandemic and take-up will continue to ramp up in 2021.

BIM provides virtual models of buildings, enabling the designer to construct a digital model before bringing the design to life physically in the real world. This reduces the potential for errors and can create incredible cost and development efficiencies on projects. Owners and Government will increase their requirements to have data rich models to ensure compliance and ensure it will be a high performing asset.

In 2021, as the construction industry starts to rebound from COVID-19, we can expect APAC businesses to leverage technology further, connecting their most important assets to their people faster, and to strategically position their businesses to maintain a competitive edge.

Jordan said he watched both of those major events alone, sitting in front of a television.

"I did not think I would live to see this day," he told NPR's Michel Martin in the weeks after Obama's victory in 2008.

During his long career, Jordan had stints leading both the National Urban League and the United Negro College Fund. He also worked in voter education and was an attorney consultant for the U.S. Office of Economic Opportunity.

Jordan has received dozens of honorary degrees – including the University of Pennsylvania, where he delivered the commencement address to his daughter's graduating class. But that speech only happened after Vickee Jordan gave her approval.

As Jordan told NPR, his daughter initially told university administrators that she would rather have her father in the stands than on stage during her graduation.

Jordan recalled, "I was not surprised when she told President [Martin] Meyerson, 'Why can't my dad just sit in the audience like other daddies?'"

But then came a change of heart, and the speech went ahead.

"I said, 'Well listen, Vickee, what about all that is ordinary daddy stuff, me sitting like an ordinary dad?'"

"And she said, 'Well, I've decided that you're not an ordinary daddy.'"

In the business world, Vernon was sought out to join corporate boards and advisory panels. He was a partner emeritus at the Akin Gump law firm and a senior managing director at Lazard Frères & Co., a financial company in New York.

"We have lost a great man today," said Kim Koopersmith, chairperson of Akin Gump, calling Jordan "a wise and trusted mentor and friend who, in all that he did, inspired us to be the best possible version of ourselves."

"His generosity was boundless, and his guidance was unassailable and delivered with a purposefulness and moral clarity that will never be equaled," Koopersmith said. "In so many respects, Vernon was one of a kind, and his enormous contributions — to our firm, to our country, and to us as individuals — will be greatly missed."

5 ways subcontractors can improve communication during the preconstruction process

[Article was originally posted on Autodesk Construction Cloud Blog,
<https://construction.autodesk.com>]

By Tony Faccenda,

Communication is a critical part of any construction project and impacts far more than just the bottom line. This is especially true during the preconstruction phase, where communication breakdowns can delay projects, cause departments to work in silos, and make budgets go awry — impacting everyone on the proverbial construction ladder.

The main cause of project delays is poor communication among stakeholders. What's more, good communication helps you stand out from the competition and is one of the three qualities general contractors look for in their subcontractors. To build lasting relationships with general contractors and ensure open communication at all levels during preconstruction, follow these five best practices.

Let general contractors know if you intend to bid or not Proper communication is vital from the very beginning of a project. If you receive a bid invite from a general contractor, it's because they see you as a quality subcontractor and are considering you for a job — and sometimes even mega-projects.

When a general contractor sends a bid invite, it's important to communicate to them whether or not you intend to bid. Often, general contractors need a set number of subcontractors to bid on a project, so if they know you're not bidding, they can then send additional bid invites out. If you are bidding, then the general contractor knows they can count on a bid from you and can compare it against competing bids to find the best subcontractor for the project.

Keep track of important due dates

Deadlines can dictate how a general contractor views a subcontractor. If you're not keeping track of important dates and all of the other moving parts, then you could miss a due date, double up on a job walk, or even worse — miss a bid entirely.

How a Company's Culture Is Key to Retaining Talent

[Article was originally posted on
www.clevelandconstruction.com]

By Cleveland Construction,

If you work in the construction industry, you're probably feeling pretty good about now. The industry is experiencing growth and the experts are predicting an increase in building projects for the foreseeable future. Most would agree...“that's a good thing.”

But, there's a nagging problem that's making a lot of construction company owners toss and turn at night. It's the ongoing challenge of hiring and retaining a skilled workforce. As you might guess, when the hiring doesn't go well...“that's a bad thing.”

Enticing experienced professionals to join your company (and stay) requires an attractive culture with a focus on employee satisfaction. The best talent is always going to be attracted to those companies where the employees are happy and appreciated.

What are some keys to providing a great company culture? Some suggestions include:

Autonomy – It's Important

The very nature of the construction industry makes autonomy in the workplace difficult. Senior management in the field can find it hard to delegate and trust employees to make decisions.

Autonomy in the workplace is important to younger generations. Minimizing micromanagement is essential to help employees build their confidence and feel valued. Giving more autonomy can also help to gain employees' trust. In addition, managers also must be willing to accept suggestions regarding other ways of completing a task. This allows employees to be more self-sufficient and to find best practices.

Diversity Is Attractive

Most of us would agree that the construction industry needs more women and minorities. With a labor shortage in the industry, it makes sense to foster a culture that offers diversity. A diverse workforce attracts workers to a place where they can see themselves and know that there are people who can relate to them.

Mentorship and Training Should Be Encouraged

Happy employees have ongoing access to continued learning to master their craft. Training invigorates employees, challenges them to be innovative, and new opportunities for personal and professional growth. Younger generations need to be plugged into mentorship programs early on, and they crave consistent feedback about their job performance. Leadership programs make younger generations feel valued and appreciated, while shaping them into future leaders.

Promoting a Sense of Purpose and Family is Critical

A sense of purpose goes a long way towards instilling pride in the job. The repetitive drudgery of the construction business can be avoided by taking the time at the start of each new project to highlight the value the completed project will bring to the community. How will this structure be used? Who will be working/ learning/ getting care in it?

Additionally, a company culture that promotes employee health and wellness programs is perceived as caring and family-friendly. Employees need to feel their workplace is a safe haven where they are encouraged to ask for help when struggling.

Recognizing individual efforts while celebrating accomplishments as a team is part of the culture at Cleveland Construction. We're quick to recognize individual efforts and then celebrate success as a team. It's in this chemistry that unbreakable bonds are formed...and we all shine together. Trust. Loyalty. A sense of belonging.

From Day #1, the goal is for employees to feel like family!

based on your business's financial profile and your personal creditworthiness.

You can choose how much of those funds you want to borrow from, and access the money whenever you need or want them most. You'll only pay interest on the money you use. Plus, interest rates on business lines of credit tend to be lower than those on business credit cards—unless you make late payments, in which case that interest rate can spike.

Business lines of credit are ideal financing solutions for most small businesses, but construction companies, in particular, can benefit from their flexibility.

You can rely on this revolving resource to replace defunct or broken equipment, hire and train a wave of employees, and have a cash cushion during seasonal dips, slow periods, or if a customer is dragging their feet on payment.

Business lines of credit can also offer backup if you need to jump on unexpected opportunities to grow your business. Even if you need to apply for a business term loan to finance big, one-time purchases down the line, you can still keep a business line of credit in your back pocket to fill in those intermittent cash-flow gaps.

3. SBA 7(a) Loans

Best for: Established businesses seeking general financing

If you're a long-time business owner with strong financials, you might qualify for the SBA 7(a) loan. Although they're backed by the U.S. government, SBA loans are actually issued by banks. The Small Business Administration guarantees the majority of the loan amount if a borrower defaults—up to 85%.

That safety net reduces the risk to the lender, so banks are actually incentivized to extend SBA loans, and at extremely favorable terms to borrowers. SBA loans carry low interest rates, long repayment periods, large business loan amounts, and low down payments.

The SBA offers a few loan programs, all of which differ according to eligible use-cases and amounts funded. But the SBA 7(a) loan is definitely the most popular and flexible type of these government-backed loans because you can use them for the widest range of business purposes.
