

Changing the Narrative for Women in Construction

By Alyssa Jaber

It's no secret that the construction industry is male-dominated. For starters, just one in ten construction workers in the US are female. In construction trades, the number is even lower — there's less than one woman to every 20 men.

Nonetheless, there are plenty of positives about being a woman in construction. Compared to other industries, construction has a narrow gender pay gap. According to The National Association of Women in Construction, females in the construction industry earn 99.1% of what their male counterparts are making. (For comparison — on average, women in the US earn 85% of what men earn.) The larger issue is the rate of promotions for women versus men. The upper ranks in the industry have fewer than 1% women.

Clearly, there's still more work to do, and to help forward the conversation, we recently held a virtual panel featuring women in construction, including:

- Amanda Gillespie, Geographical Construction Operations Manager, Infrastructure Construction at Facebook
- Kaitlin Frank, Superintendent at Dome Construction
- Kim Bates, Corporate Service Leader, DPR
- Nancy Novak, Chief Innovation Office at Compass Data Centers

The discussion was moderated by Amy Marks, Head of Industrialized Construction Strategy & Evangelism at Autodesk.

Each woman shared her experience in the field, along with valuable insights on how we as an industry can grow and make meaningful progress towards diversity and inclusion.

Have a look at what they had to say.

How to Attract More Women to the Construction Industry

When it comes to the topic of women in construction, the most pressing issue to address is the fact that there are so few females in the industry. With the construction industry expected to see an 11% workforce growth from 2018 to 2028, how do we ensure that more women are brought into the fold?

Small Business Digital Alliance Marks One-Year Anniversary

 Article originally appeared in [www.sba.gov ]

The Small Business Digital Alliance (SBDA), a co-sponsorship between the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) and Business Forward, Inc., celebrates its one-year anniversary. The SBDA provides a comprehensive suite of free digital resources, virtual trainings, and expanded opportunities to help small businesses grow their online presence, reach new customers, strengthen business operations, and more.

“Our Small Business Digital Alliance has empowered countless small businesses to make or strengthen their digital pivot,” said SBA Administrator Guzman. “The SBDA helps American entrepreneurs leverage valuable free resources to grow revenue, build resilience, and advance the American dream of business ownership. This unprecedented collaboration between the SBA, Business Forward, and leading private sector technology companies is bringing opportunity to more entrepreneurs by helping them with everything from cybersecurity to workforce strategies and marketing.”

Since its launch in March 2022, the SBDA has:

- Reached more than 15 million small businesses and entrepreneurs across America through national programming, regional events, and digital content tailored to small business needs.

- Worked with 15 of America's most respected companies and 40 local organizations to provide small business owners and entrepreneurs with more than 300 free digital tools to grow their businesses in the e-commerce economy, create competitive advantages, and lower barriers to entry.
- Organized a series of 13 regional events and virtual trainings across the country to help entrepreneurs expand their networks and learn new skills, discuss small business trends, and showcase local success stories.
- Hosted four national webinars highlighting free digital tools and featured expertise and testimonials from our National Members and Local Allies.

As the SBDA celebrates its one-year anniversary, it is:

- Publishing reports on the state of small businesses across America highlighting the economic contributions of small businesses, the benefits of free digital tools, and the advantages of a digital economy.

- Sharing thought leadership from National Members, Local Allies, and the SBDA on small business trends, promoting American competitiveness by going digital, lowering the barrier to entrepreneurship, and more.
- Hosting regional events with entrepreneurs, small business advocates, and private sector leaders on how to create a more customer-centric, tech-forward, and equitable small business ecosystem.

“Since the launch of the SBDA, nearly two-thirds of small businesses have gone digital. Last year, e-commerce sales contributed more than $770 billion to the U.S. economy, representing about one-fifth of total annual retail sales,” said Liz Fairchild, Executive Director of Business Forward. “Thanks to the SBDA's National Members and Local Allies, our small business community has become more resilient by leveraging digital tools to reach new talent, strengthen their operations, and attract demand from around the world.”

CELEBRATING COMMUNITY

Celebrating 30 Years of Greenlining for a Just Future

[ Article originally appeared in
<https://greenlining.org> ]

This year, the Greenlining Institute is celebrating our 30th anniversary: three decades of building a future where communities of color can thrive.

A History Rooted in Community Activism

In 1979, founders John Gamboa and Bob Gnaizda formed an informal, multi-racial, intersectional coalition built around the concept of greenlining. Their idea was simple and revolutionary: what if, instead of competing over crumbs, we could grow the size of the pie for everyone?

The coalition worked together to create a future of abundance through a just economy – a greenlined economy. The Greenlining Coalition went on to successfully advocate for comprehensive policy changes that would benefit communities of color: from requiring the state's largest utilities to report on their supplier diversity to securing landmark Community Reinvestment Act agreements from some of California's biggest banks.

Building on these early successes, The Greenlining Institute was formally established on March 8, 1993 as a non-profit organization with a mission to ensure race is never a barrier to economic opportunity.

Thirty years later and our coalition still plays a key role in our work, lending important grassroots voices to our advocacy efforts, and keeping us grounded in the real-world experiences of their members and communities.

Our Impact Over Time:

For the past 30 years, Greenlining's team of racial equity experts has successfully advocated and negotiated more than $800 billion in corporate and public investments into formerly redlined neighborhoods. But that's not all:

1979: The Greenlining Coalition was Established – John Gamboa and Bob Gnaizda formed an informal, multi-ethnic, multi-organizational coalition built around the concept of greenlining.

1979 to 1980: Advocated for Executive Order requiring major utilities and telecommunications companies to report on supplier diversity – The Greenlining Coalition advocated for this policy that required the state's largest regulated utilities and telecommunications companies to annually report their percentages of contracts given to women-, disabled veteran-, and minority-owned business enterprises. The order made it state policy to promote the interests of diverse businesses to maintain and strengthen the overall economy of the state.

1990s Greenlining Coalition

1992: Negotiated 10 year, $1 billion CRA commitment with Sumitomo Bank – Amidst pressure from the coalition, Sumitomo Bank of California doubled its 10-year commitment to lend to low-income home buyers and small businesses from $500 million to $1 billion under the Community Reinvestment Act.

1993: The Greenlining Institute is formed – Building on the success and influence of the coalition, the Greenlining Institute was formally created and incorporated on March 8th, 1993.

1995: Wells Fargo agrees to a 10-year, $45 billion CRA commitment – Wells Fargo agreed to a $45 billion 10-year lending pledge for affordable housing, small businesses, and community development – a record at the time—was a direct result of “non-stop pressure” by Greenlining and other groups, the San Jose Mercury News noted.

2004: Greenlining warns of housing market trouble – Greenlining specifically discussed subprime and predatory loans with Chairman Greenspan and other Federal reserve executives. In February 2004, we convened a meeting with 15 financial institutions and regulators from various government agencies, asking for banks to assume fiduciary responsibility to its borrowers. Not one bank agreed to the proposal.

2004: Casa Joaquin Murrieta joins the Leadership Academy – the Greenlining Institute acquired Casa Joaquin Murrieta, integrating it as a part of its Leadership Academy. Since then, Casa has become a multi-ethnic residential leadership program serving low- and moderate-income, first-generation UC Berkeley college students from diverse backgrounds.

2007: Greenlining launches Climate Equity program – Greenlining launched Green Assets, a new environmental equity program to advance our mission. In 2010, Greenlining helped defeat Proposition 23 as part of a coalition called Communities United Against the Dirty Energy Proposition. Prop 23 would have repealed AB 32, the Global Warming Solutions Act, the most important piece of environmental legislation since the Clean Water Act.

2010-2011: Greenlining's advocacy helps pass Dodd-Frank Act – Greenlining pushed for better, faster, more effective mortgage relief for victims of the foreclosure crisis speaking out through protests and op-eds. Greenlining was also an outspoken advocate for the Dodd-Frank financial reform bill and the need for strong equity standards. As part of our efforts, we also pushed for the creation of an independent Consumer Financial Protections Bureau.

2012 to 2016: Successfully advocated for SB535 and AB1550 directing $3.5B in climate investments to priority communications – Greenlining was instrumental in passing legislation SB 535 and AB 1550 ultimately generating $10 billion in funding to fight climate change and over $3.5 billion in funding targeted for low-income communities.

2016: Transformative Climate Communities is established – TCC was created by AB 2722, cosponsored by The Greenlining Institute and the California Environmental Justice Alliance. TCC is an innovative model that fosters community-led solutions to climate change that meet the needs of frontline neighborhoods.

2017: The Greenlining Institute launches the 360 Center – Greenlining purchased and transformed our 85-year-old, failed bank building in the heart of downtown Oakland into a flourishing, energy-efficient nonprofit center built by local, Black and Brown-owned businesses as a hub of collaboration and Community activism.

2018: Charge Ahead Coalition secures millions for equitable electric vehicles in California Greenlining led the Charge Ahead Coalition to successfully advocate to designate $236 million for vulnerable communities in large scale electric vehicles, and secured over $550 million for charging infrastructure and EV access programs in disadvantaged and low-income communities through the Volkswagen Diesel settlement.

2020: TEEM Community of Practice extends Greenlining's equitable mobility program across the U.S. – Building on the success of the Charge Ahead coalition efforts, the Greenlining Institute launched the Towards Equitable Electric Mobility Community of Practice to advance racial equity in electric mobility and climate change goals. The cohort includes organizations from Colorado, Illinois, Michigan, North Carolina, and Virginia.

2022: Greenlining's Economic Equity team expands program to focus on closing the Digital Divide – In 2020, Greenlining's Economic Equity team launched a report on closing the digital divide to increase economic opportunity for communities of color. In 2021, we launched the Oakland Town Link program focusing the effort in our own backyard.

Celebrating 30 Years of Greenlining for a Just Future

2023: The Greenlining Institute launches Greenlining the Block – The new multi-year initiative builds power in community-based organizations that are advancing climate justice neighborhood projects with a $6.75 million commitment of resources to communities across California, Colorado, Illinois, Virginia, North Carolina, and Michigan.

And we're just getting started.

Greenlining for An Abundant Future

There's no doubt that a lot has changed since 1993. But so have we.

We have entered a new era of data-informed redlining harming people of color and low-income communities. Greenlining is on the cutting edge of innovation, anticipating where the challenges and barriers will emerge, while also creating opportunities to bring wealth and prosperity to communities of color. Everyday, we work to build a just economy—a greenlined economy—where communities of color can build wealth and live in healthy places filled with economic opportunity.

Today, we act as an incubator of new policy ideas, a bridge builder between frontline communities, companies, and government, and an advocate to build momentum for transformative change.

Recognizing that America's racial wealth gap was created by deliberate policy choices; it will take deliberate, race-conscious choices to end it. We don't see these interactions as a zero-sum game in which one side must win and the other must lose. Instead, we reach for win-win solutions that expand opportunity for everyone.

We are stepping forward with boldness and precision to address the root causes of widespread racial and economic inequity. By focusing on the most acute needs that must be addressed; we can advance policy solutions that are race-conscious, intersectional, and rooted in community priorities.

Join us for the work ahead in the next 30 years to build on the legacy of our founders and early coalition. Together we can establish enduring and meaningful solutions so that communities of color can thrive and race is truly never a barrier to opportunity.

The answer, according to our panelists, lies in the three things: starting young, reframing people's perceptions, and increasing the visibility of women in construction.

Start Young

Many in the panel agreed that one of the first steps to getting women interested in construction is to cultivate their enthusiasm while they're young.

She adds that part of doing that means emphasizing the fact that construction isn't just about power tools or dirt. "Construction is not just about swinging a hammer. It involves technology and a lot of management — there's a lot that goes into it today."

Reframe the Messaging Around Construction

When the word "construction" comes up, many people picture sites filled with workers in hard hats operating large machinery. And while that view is accurate, it's not the only thing that construction is about.

To bring more women into this field, the panel agreed that the industry needs to highlight the other dimensions of having a career in construction.

For example, a major part of construction is to come up with creative solutions. As Kim Bates points out, "the beauty of construction is that you're faced with opportunities to be creative when solving complex problems. And, when you can do that with a diverse perspective from a collection of different people, it's awesome. I think we have to continue to share successes specifically by women, outside of our industry." There's a strong business case for diversity bringing about more innovation, better problem solving, and therefore more profitability.

Be Proud and Highly Visible

It'll be difficult to draw in more women into the construction industry if there aren't any prominent female figures or role models.

For this reason, panelists commented that women who are currently in construction should strive to increase their visibility within and outside the industry.

"Be more visible," advises Amanda Gillespie.

Don't be afraid to stand out, she adds. "Be proud of who you are and raise awareness."

Qualifiers: Healthy or Harmful?

Another topic of discussion was whether or not it's okay to use qualifiers when referring to women in construction. Should teams spotlight or emphasize their female colleagues because they're women or is this doing more harm than good?

Our panelists had varying views on this topic.

According to Gillespie, it's a case-by-case basis. Hashtags like #WomenInConstruction are good when they're used to elevate women and drive awareness. However, qualifiers become problematic when they're used in a patronizing way or in a manner that expresses disbelief.

She recalled one situation where a qualifier was used in an almost condescending way. "I had a colleague and somebody actually came up and said, 'Hey, I heard you guys got substantial completion. That's quite an accomplishment, especially for a black woman.' It was like there was no way she could; like it was a miracle."

Other panelists felt that qualifiers are necessary — at least for the time being.

"I think for now the qualifier is significant," says Bates. "I think we have to acknowledge, promote and celebrate when we're recognized because it's a white male-dominated industry; like Amanda's example, it was almost unheard of that a black woman found success in her expected role."

She continues, "we have to keep on talking about it until we're tired of it, or until it's popular — or maybe the "norm". We're not there yet. We have to share and educate the industry about the talents of women in a space that has historically been male dominated."

It's also worth noting that qualifiers can be used to a woman's advantage.

"I feel like being a woman in construction is like a superpower," shares Frank. "You can use it to your advantage."

She discusses how being polite (which is commonly attributed to females) can go a long way when working on projects.

"On a jobsite, it's amazing how far 'please' and 'thank you' will go and it's not heard often enough. The field crews are my family and they treat me with respect. They're protective of me and I'm protective of them, and it goes back and forth."

How Construction Firms Can Be More Diverse and Inclusive

There are several action steps that construction professionals — both men and women — can do to promote diversity and inclusion in the industry. Some of the most notable points brought up in the discussion include:

Champion Other Women

Giving women a voice is important, says Nancy Novak. "I encourage teammates, both women and men, to amplify the voices of the women and underrepresented folks in the room who don't get to be heard as often."

"We have to continue to support each other, lift each other up," adds Bates. "Advocate for women whenever possible personally and professionally. Complement each other. Say hello. Smile. Give high fives."
