

Top Railway Projects in the US

[Article originally appeared in Autodesk Construction Cloud Blog. <https://construction.autodesk.com>]

By Grace Ellis,

There's currently a major opportunity for railway construction projects in the United States, thanks to increasing infrastructure funding and support from citizens.

Data cited by Amtrak indicates that 75% of US consumers believe we should shift more trips to passenger rail to reduce transportation's impact on climate change. What's more, almost half of Americans (46%) are in favor of increasing investments in passenger rail.

And despite facing challenges like high project costs and longer turnaround times, the railway sector in the US continues to grow. ResearchAndMarkets.com expects railway project spending to grow from $106.2 billion this year to $114.3 billion in 2023.

In this post, we'll take a look at some of the most notable railway projects in the US. Check them out!

Seattle, Washington: Sound Transit

To say that Sound Transit 3 (ST3) is an ambitious initiative would be an understatement. This $54 billion light-rail project adds 62 miles of new light rail and 37 more stations to create a 116-mile regional transit system in Seattle. The program consists of over 20 projects that would be completed from 2019 through 2041.

In addition to the large distance covered by the project, ST3 involves highly sophisticated engineering work. For instance, certain sections of the transit line must be installed on top of a floating moving bridge that runs through a massive lake. Some of the elevated tracks would also be situated in earthquake-prone areas and thus need to be built and reinforced to comply with highly rigorous safety standards.

Have a look at the video below, which sheds light on the details of ST3 and what it would take to complete it.

California: High Speed Rail

Over in California, the High Speed Rail Authority is building the state's first high-speed train transit system which will connect the megaregions of the state. Capable of speeds of up to more than 200 miles per hour, the system will be able to take passengers from San Francisco to Los Angeles in less than three hours.

As of 2022, the project has completed all the major design elements for the 119-mile Central Valley Segment and the California Rail Authority intends to advance designs for several other stations in the area.

California's high-speed rail project will eventually extend to San Diego and Sacramento and would total 800 miles and 24 stations.

New York East Side Access

East Side Access (ESA) is a New York City public works project designed to connect the Long Island Rail Road (LIRR) to Grand Central Terminal on Manhattan's East Side.

Scheduled to be operational by December 2022, the project involves constructing a new terminal that contains eight tracks and four platforms.

The station will have two levels and sit more than 100 feet below street level.

Upon completion, ESA is expected to serve around 162,000 commuters a day. The terminal will reduce or eliminate the need for subway transfers and will lower commute times into Manhattan by about 40 minutes. It's also expected to reduce vehicular traffic and improve air quality in the area.

Chicago, Illinois: CTA's Red/Purple Line Modernization

Sections of the Red and Purple lines in Chicago consist of 9.6 miles of tracks that were built back in 1924. Because of its age, the infrastructure for the Red and Purple lines requires frequent (and costly) maintenance and repair. Moreover, the Red Line has hit its capacity; being the busiest "L" line in Chicago, it's becoming difficult to keep up with the transit needs of the area's growing population.

To address these issues, the Chicago Transit Authority (CTA) is carrying out the Red-Purple Modernization project, which involves completely rebuilding the Lawrence, Argyle, Berwyn, and Bryn Mawr stations, as well as all the tracks and structures surrounding the terminals.

The project also involves building a Red-Purple Bypass north of Belmont station where Red, Purple, and Brown Line trains currently intersect. This will remove the need for trains to stop and wait for other trains to cross, ultimately enabling the CTA to increase the number of trains, minimize crowds, and serve commuters better.

Texas: Texas Central

The Texas Central project is a high-speed train line that connects North Texas and Greater Houston, with one stop in Brazos Valley. The high-speed train, which can reach speeds of over 200 miles an hour, will enable commuters to travel back and forth between Houston and Dallas/Fort Worth in less than 90 minutes.

Approximately 240 miles, this rail line will offer departures every 30 minutes during rush hour, and will have trains departing every 60 minutes during non-peak periods. Texas Central expects to have an eight-car train that can seat around 400 people. It will operate on closed tracks and will be fully dedicated to transporting passengers.

As for the train stations, the project includes three terminals: the North Texas Station in Dallas, the Brazos Valley Station in Grimes County, and the Houston Station.

Leverage innovative tools for your infrastructure and railway projects

Large-scale infrastructure projects such as railways are some of the most important yet challenging initiatives you can undertake. That's why it's essential to have a sophisticated platform that enables teams to manage and track the multiple moving parts of these projects.

U.S. Small Business Administration and Public Private Strategies Institute Announce Launch of New Engagement Series, Building a Better America: A Small Business Resource Community

[Article originally appeared in www.sba.gov]

The U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) and Public Private Strategies Institute (PPSI) announced the launch of Building a Better America: A Small Business Resource Community (BBA Resource Community), a new engagement series geared toward connecting America's 32.5 million small businesses with critical resources and information about the Biden-Harris Administration's efforts to support entrepreneurs.

"Small businesses are at the heart of the Biden-Harris Administration's economic agenda as we know they power our nation's historic economic growth and job creation," said U.S. Small Business Administrator Isabella Casillas Guzman. "The SBA is proud to launch Building a Better America: A Small Business Resource Community, to help highlight opportunities on the horizon thanks to President Biden's commitment to increasing competition, rebuilding our supply chains, and investing in American ingenuity. The BBA Resource Community will be an important tool to help enhance the Small Business Administration's larger effort to ensure that entrepreneurs in rural and urban communities across America have the resources they need to capitalize on this historic moment for economic development and generate growth for their businesses, communities, and families for generations to come."

Through the BBA Resource Community, respected leaders from small businesses, economic development, and other sectors will headline briefings and training. In addition, this new initiative will also feature a series of free briefings and trainings to help small businesses access tools and resources and help them learn about new opportunities available thanks to the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act (Bipartisan Infrastructure Law). The BBA Resource Community will also provide opportunities for small business owners to expand their networks and connect with key stakeholders that are critical for business success.

"The small business landscape has been transformed by the COVID-19 pandemic and rapid changes in our economy, and small business leaders need the most up-to-date information and resources to continue to grow, innovate, and thrive," said Rhett Buttle, President of Public

Private Strategies Institute. "Through Building a Better America: A Small Business Resource Community, the Small Business Administration and Public Private Strategies Institute will convene experts from across government, business, and advocacy to provide small business leaders with critical training and resources, as well as updates on new opportunities for small businesses."

Mayor London Breed Announces 28% Decrease in Processing Time for Over-the-Counter Building Permits to Speed Construction

[Article originally appeared in <https://sfmayor.org>]

Mayor London N. Breed, San Francisco Department of Building Inspection (DBI), and the San Francisco Permit Center today released data documenting a 28% decrease in Over-the-Counter (OTC) building permit application processing times in February 2022 compared to the same time last year. During February, 60% of OTC customers got their building permits within two business days of submitting an application.

Streamlining the permitting process and making it easier for individuals and companies to navigate San Francisco's bureaucracy has been a focus of Mayor Breed's since taking office. By streamlining the process for building permits, the City can help reduce the time and cost for construction across the City.

"As I said in my State of the City address, our city government needs to ensure we're delivering on the basic services that residents expect. That means when someone wants to remodel their kitchen, or repair their deck, that the process is transparent, straightforward, and easy to navigate," said Mayor Breed. "By creating a one-stop permit center and bringing together the multiple departments involved in this process, we've made it easier for people to get their permits and get started on their project. We're going to keep looking for ways to build on this progress."

Over-the-Counter permits accounted for 94% of all building permits issued in February 2022 (1,716 out of 1,816 building permits were OTC) and cover most construction work, including commercial tenant improvements, residential kitchen remodels, bathroom additions, and deck repairs.

"During the past year, we've started to reorganize our work processes around the needs of the customer. The faster processing times are proof that those efforts are succeeding," said Patrick O'Riordan, Director of the Department of Building Inspection. "Our goal very simple: provide efficient and effective oversight as part of a positive customer experience for every permit applicant. We are committed to getting there one step at a time."

The strong partnership between DBI and the Permit Center has been key to the recent service gains in OTC building permit review and processing. Together, the two departments have started to deploy a series of customer service initiatives designed to speed permit review, offer high-quality staff support for all permit applicants, and provide a better experience for permit customers.

In particular, the implementation of the Qless customer notification and online waiting system, which allows visitors to check their waiting time online before heading out the door, has been central to the success of Over-the-Counter permitting as it reduces the customer's time at the

Cities With the Most Women in Construction

[Article originally appeared in www.bigrentz.com]

By Jonathan Jones,

Construction has long been a male-dominated field. According to data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, only about 13 percent of payroll employees in the construction industry are women—a number that has remained relatively stagnant since the 1990s. When also taking into account self-employed workers, the proportion is even lower, at just 10.3 percent. Despite the gender gap in employment, some job functions and locations offer better opportunities for women seeking a career in the construction industry.

Nationwide, there are over 1.1 million women working in construction, compared to 9.9 million men. In addition to differences in total employment, men and women tend to fill different occupations within the industry. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, women who work in construction are most likely to work in office or administrative positions. By contrast, men have much higher representation in roles related to finance, transportation, construction, extraction, and maintenance.

A major benefit for women in the construction industry is that they tend to command higher wages than female workers in other fields.

The median full-time wage for women in construction is $46,808 per year, compared to $43,394 for female workers across all industries. Interestingly, the opposite is true for men in construction, who generally earn less than the typical male worker. In addition, men and women in the construction industry report relatively equal pay. While the national gender pay gap across all industries is 19 percent, the gender pay gap in construction is only 3.7 percent.

Although only 10.3 percent of workers in the construction industry are women, some parts of the country have much stronger female representation. To find which cities have the most women in construction, researchers at Construction Coverage analyzed employment data from the U.S. Census Bureau's 2019 American Community Survey 1-Year Estimates. Researchers ranked cities based on the female employment share in the construction industry. In the final rankings, cities were categorized by population size: small (100,000–149,999), midsize (150,000–349,999), and large (350,000 or more).

Most of the cities on the list are concentrated in the South or the West, with some representation in the Midwest and little in the Northeast. Here are the cities with the most women in construction.

Within a year, the two men had gone into business together as partners. They continued to work hard and expand their business until they incorporated, founding Creative Millworks Inc. in June 2015.

They had used their talents to establish themselves in a new country, but Serhiy and Andrei were still struggling to grow their business. They lacked credit and were unable to get a small loan from any banks. After seeing an advertisement for Opening Doors' microloan program in the newspaper, they applied for and received a loan to buy new equipment and expand their operation.

They moved from a 2400 sq ft workspace to a 4500 sq ft facility, sped up their production, and began producing higher quality cabinets. As a result of their loan from Opening Doors, some coaching from their loan officer, and their own business ingenuity, they doubled their revenue to more than $400,000 annually and hired a second employee. However, Serhiy and Andrei aren't satisfied with their progress yet.

They have created a website, www.creative-millwork.com, for their business and are confident more outreach and advertising will bring in more clients. They plan to build more connections with architects and contractors. By focusing on their customers and making sure that their work is of the highest quality, durability, and adherence to their customers' specifications, Serhiy and Andrei are on track to establish Creative Millworks, Inc. as a go-to cabinet manufacturer in the Sacramento area.

When banks wouldn't give them a loan, they found a solution with Opening Doors. Now, they get frequent loan offers from those banks and they get to choose where they'll take their business.

Permit Center and creates more certainty in the process. The Permit Center also recently opened a new onsite Print Center to make it easier for permit applicants to take care of all their construction permitting needs in one location.

"Putting our customers' needs first has always been our priority. That mind set is what created these profound and positive impacts on our operations and ability to serve the public," said Rebecca Villareal-Mayer, Director of the San Francisco Permit Center. "We remember the earlier days when our teams were reviewing documents outdoor in the parking lot at the height of COVID, that is because we have our customers' best interest in mind.

DBI has also expanded the permits that can be applied for online to include kitchens, bathrooms and reroofing, and are making incremental improvements to DBI's website starting our most popular, customer-focused pages, including Over-the-Counter, In-House Review, Complaints, and Solar installations.

OTC applications are submitted at the Permit Center located on the second floor of 49 South Van Ness. The Permit Center was opened in August 2020, providing a centralized place for construction, special events, and business permitting, by working closely with a wide range of City agencies such as Planning Department, Public Works, Fire Department, Public Utilities Commission, Public Health and others.
