Vice President Kamala Harris announced the recipients of The U.S. Department of Commerce’s Capital Readiness Program signifying a groundbreaking initiative to empower and uplift minority entrepreneurs and businesses across the nation. Administered by the Minority Business Development Agency (MBDA), this program represents the largest dedicated investment ever made by the Commerce Department to support minority-owned enterprises.

The MBDA Capital Readiness Program is a $125 million initiative aimed at assisting underserved entrepreneurs in growing their businesses. The program will support business incubators or accelerators that help these entrepreneurs prepare to secure funding from the $10 billion State Small Business Credit Initiative and other sources. This program’s launch is significant for the MBDA, which became a permanent Federal Agency in November 2021 through President Biden’s Bipartisan Infrastructure Law.

High-Speed Rail Authority Celebrates Completion of Grade Separation Project in City of Wasco

[Article originally appeared in www.constructconnect.com]

The California High-Speed Rail Authority (Authority), in collaboration with California Rail Builders and the city of Wasco, celebrated the completion of the Poso Avenue grade separation project. The underpass is now open to traffic.

The Poso Avenue underpass is located between State Route (SR) 43 and J Street and has four lanes and pedestrian access. It will serve as a grade separation, taking traffic and pedestrians under the BNSF freight railroad and future high-speed rail tracks.

“The California High-Speed Rail Authority is appreciative for the collaboration and partnership from the city of Wasco as we bring this historic project one step closer to completion,” said Central Valley Regional Director Garth Fernandez. “Completion of the Poso Avenue underpass brings us closer to completion of this southernmost section of construction in the Central Valley and delivering electrified passenger service for the people of California.”

“The city is excited to have this important underpass open to traffic today,” said Wasco City Manager Scott Hurlbert. “Poso Avenue is a vital connection between Wasco’s industrial area and Highway 43, and also provides secondary access to Highway 46. The new underpass, combined with the closure of the Sixth Street rail crossing, removes two at-grade rail crossings, a significant safety improvement.”

Poso Avenue underpass and grade separation by the numbers:

- 1,084 feet long;
- 67 feet wide;
- 21 feet below grade;
- Three bridges that will carry either high-speed rail, BNSF, or vehicle traffic over Poso Avenue.

The Poso Street underpass is the latest structure to be opened to traffic in Kern County, and the sixth structure to be completed in the Central Valley this year. The Authority also announced the completion of the McCombs Road grade separation in July.

Also last month, the Authority announced the completion of the Elkhorn Avenue overcrossing in Fresno County, and earlier this year, grade separations at Idaho and Dover avenues in Kings County were also opened to traffic. The Authority announced the completion of the Cedar Viaduct, a high-speed rail signature structure in Fresno County, in May.

Since the start of construction, the Authority has created more than 11,000 construction jobs, a majority going to residents from the Central Valley. This includes creating more than 2,116 jobs for residents living in Kern County.

The Authority has begun work to extend the 119 miles under construction to 171 miles of future electrified high-speed rail from Merced to Bakersfield. There are more than 30 active construction sites in California’s Central Valley, with the Authority having environmentally cleared 422 miles of the high-speed rail program from the Bay Area to the Los Angeles Basin.

The Top 5 Resume Mistakes Military-Connected Job Seekers Make and How to Fix Them

[Article originally appeared in www.hiringourheroes.org]

By Hiring Our Heroes

Use Your Most Recent Work History

You may want to include every job you've ever had on your resume but resist the temptation.

Career Connectors recommend highlighting your recent work experiences instead of your entire work history.

"Employers want your current experience and knowledge on your resume. There's no reason to highlight more than 10 years of experience," Miller said.

Bottom line: Save your entire work history for a job application. Limit your resume to a one-page or two-page document. Your civilian resume should never be longer than two pages.

Add Only Relevant Experience

Our friends at Indeed report employers spend six seconds, on average, scanning through a resume to determine if the person has the right experience for the job opening. Make those seconds count and get hiring managers to spend more time reading your resume by prioritizing your relevant experience to match the job you are applying for.

Are you unsure which work experience to use on your resume? The answer is in the job announcement, said Larissa Rodriguez, a Career Connector at Hiring Our Heroes.

"Review your resume and the job description side by side. Any experience in the job description should mirror your experience or skills and be included in your resume," Rodriguez said. "Remove any work experience on your resume that you don't see in the job description. It is not relevant for this job."

Your qualifications should be obvious to the person reading your resume. Don't be vague.

"The reality is someone reading your resume will not care how many jobs you have had; they will care about your experience and how it is relevant to the needs of their company," Rodriguez said.

Don't force hiring managers to search your resume for relevant experience. They won't do it. They will interview someone else.

Bottom line: It's more important to highlight relevant skills, knowledge, and experience than job descriptions.

Use Keywords

And while we are on the topic of the job announcement, let's review the importance of keywords in your resume.

Companies use Applicant Tracking Systems (ATS) to electronically screen resumes and applications for keywords and phrases related to the job. ATS software can rank resumes based on keywords. Basically, keywords are the difference between a hiring manager reviewing your resume and your resume being lost and unseen in a digital dark hole.

Career Connectors recommend looking at the job description you're applying for to find the keywords. Employers often use keywords in a bulleted list of requirements or desired skills for job applicants. The keywords may be certain skills, certifications, or software programs.

Bottom line: Keywords and phrases must be used in your resume but do not overload your resume with them.

Delete Acronyms and Military Jargon

Your resume shouldn't look like you're staring into a bowl of alphabet soup.

"If it's not 100% obvious to the person reading your resume, then ditch the acronym and spell out the word," said Racheal Tucker, a Career Connector at Hiring Our Heroes.

Military unit name acronyms and training exercise abbreviations are among the most common ones used by transitioning service members and veterans on their resumes, according to the HOH Career Connectors.

"I always recommend military-connected job seekers ask a non-military friend or family member to read through their resume," Tucker said. "Or imagine a recruiter with zero military background or experience reading the resume. Are they going to know what 2ID Divarty is? Will they be familiar with 593D ESC CPCE?"

Jargon isn't only an issue for military veterans. Civilians do it too.

"There will be unique acronyms at every place you'll ever work. Your new employer will most likely not care about the personalized name of your former employer's enterprise business intelligence system, so instead, use a general term to describe proprietary systems," she said.

WORKFORCE DEVELOPMENT

California Workforce Association and its members are paving the way for people with disabilities

[Article originally appeared in <https://calworkforce.org>]

By Anne Stokes

According to the Department of Labor, individuals with a disability were significantly more likely to be unemployed than their typically abled peers. Across all age groups, only 19% of people with a disability were working in 2021 versus nearly 64% of those without a disability. And 29% of workers with a disability were employed part-time versus 16% of those without a disability.

"Many people with disabilities, particularly those with intellectual disabilities and developmental disabilities, (may not) know that there are career opportunities out there for them," says MaryAnn Pranke, Verdugo Workforce Development Board member and coordinator for GlendaleLEARNNS. "Caseworkers don't even know, people who work with them daily who would love to provide resources to the people they work with, they don't know about the career opportunities out there. ... And even less know that there's anybody out there who can actually help them get a job."

A path to success

The Verdugo CNC Machinist Academy at Glendale Community College provides career opportunities for individuals with disabilities. A collaboration between the college, GlendaleLEARNNS, the Department of Rehabilitation, the Lanterman Group and the Verdugo Job Center, the program was specifically designed for students with intellectual and developmental disabilities, the first in Los Angeles County.

"What we do is we design the programs to bring together the partners and the employers to be able to design the career pathways," Pranke says. "We're trying to get livable wages here and the only way to do that is to look at manufacturing (and) high tech industries."

Pranke notes that the program's placement rate was about 86% and that wages start at $16, but some students have gone on to earn $40 an hour. With such success, they're looking to expand the program to include other industries, including information technology, bio-manufacturing and digital media.

The program also provides supportive services like tutoring and job coaching. Verdugo pays for students' registration fees, books, tools, transportation and other needs. As added incentives for companies, they're also able to subsidize paid externship opportunities and on-the-job training, as well as coach employers in creating an inclusive work environment.

"You'd be surprised at how small of a change can really help someone perform a job that you have," says Melissa Younesian, manager of the Verdugo Job Center. "I think a lot of employers feel that when it comes to accommodations, they need to rebuild their entire building to accommodate someone. It could be something as simple as a screen on the computer or maybe a voice-activated keyboard."

Streamlining the way

The CNC Machinist Academy is a collaborative effort designed to provide a seamless educational experience for students, minimizing administrative requirements and streamlining access to supportive services. Program partners assist students with enrollment, financial needs, books and equipment, finding a job and post-employment supports.

"We all came together to be able to provide this program and set up a training that would be effective for students, guide them through it and provide resources," says Dr. Alfred Ramirez, administrative dean of Continuing and Community Education for Glendale Community College District and director of GlendaleLEARNs. "All of this would be done through our collaboration on the back end instead of having the student go through it all. This is what made it a lot more successful and I think this is what provided the students with a better experience, to be able to just concentrate on going to school, getting through that part and assimilating into the workforce."

But while supportive services are readily available, modifications to coursework are not.

"Whatever they need, we will provide the support, but we're not going to modify that program because they have to be able to get a job and keep that job," Pranke explains. "What we've learned is that employers hire and retain talent, not charity. Even those who are willing to take on an employee with a disability out of charity, if that person can't produce, they're not going to keep that person. We need to make sure that our students have the skills to be able to get that job and keep that job. They can't do that if we don't prepare them correctly."

Providing guidance

Another common obstacle to employment for many people with disabilities is the loss of Supplemental Security Income benefits. As with many support programs, SSI requirements can be complicated to navigate, but are vital to many individuals with disabilities, particularly health care.

"We try to draw out a plan for them so they understand what it really means if they get a job and what those milestones are they need to look for if they don't want to lose their benefits," explains Younesian. "A bigger part of it is really to explain to them that it's OK if they do end up making more money and losing parts of their benefits because they get more if they are working and making wages."

Through the federally funded Employment Network Program, benefits counselors can help students ensure they stay within SSI requirements, as well as provide post-employment supports.

"At Employment Network we do benefits counseling, we help them get a job, and once they get a job we keep them on, providing ... post-employment services, which means things like upgrading skills or getting a better job, or going for a promotion," says Younesian. "We help them keep the job they have and maybe do something better."

Ultimately, the program's goal is to empower student to thrive in the workplace, something that can't be achieved without the support of employers willing to hire them.

"A disability doesn't describe a person," says Younesian. "When we shift the emphasis away from the disability and we focus on what this person can do, it works better."

Construction Spending Grows 0.5 Percent In June To An Annual Rate Of $1.94 Trillion

[Article originally appeared in www.agc.org]

Total construction spending increased by 0.5 percent in June driven by increases in most residential and nonresidential construction segments, according to an analysis of federal spending data the Associated General Contractors of America released today. Association officials noted that spending on highway and street projects declined for the month in June, however, warning that regulatory confusion around issues like Buy America rules were delaying activity on many projects.

“Despite high interest rates, private sector demand for most types of construction activity continues to expand,” said Stephen E. Sandherr, the association’s chief executive officer. “Ironically, demand softened in sectors like power and highway & street construction where Washington has directed significant sums.”

Construction spending, not adjusted for inflation, totaled $1.938 trillion, at a seasonally adjusted annual rate in June. That figure is 0.5 percent above the May rate, which was revised up from the initial estimate. Spending on private residential construction increased for the second consecutive month in June, by 0.9 percent. Spending on private nonresidential construction was flat in June, while public construction investment increased 0.3 percent.

Spending was mostly positive among large non-residential segments. The biggest component, commercial construction—comprising warehouse, retail, and farm construction—increased 0.1 percent in June compared to a month ago. Spending on manufacturing plants increased 0.3 percent between May and June. Spending on office construction grew by 0.7 percent for the month. Educational construction grew by 0.1 percent compared to the prior month. However, spending on power construction fell by 1.3 percent for the month and highway and street construction fell by 0.1 percent compared to May.

Residential spending grew by 0.9 percent from May to June. Single-family homebuilding contributed the majority share of the growth, expanding by 2.1 percent for the month. New multifamily construction also was up 1.5 percent compared to May.

Association officials said the spending increases for most categories were welcome news and a sign of continued economic strength. But they warned that confusion about some of the regulatory requirements associated with the federal construction funding – including incomplete guidance on new Buy America rules – was delaying many construction projects where funding has been announced, but construction has yet to start.

“Confusion about some of the strings that come with the new federal construction funds is limiting the economic impact of these investments for now,” said Sandherr. “The sooner the administration clarifies questions around Buy America and the rules around clean energy investments, the sooner construction can begin on many infrastructure and power projects across the country.”

3 Ways General Contractors Can Combat Labor Shortages

[Article originally appeared in www.constructconnect.com]

By Nemanja Simic

The labor shortage in construction is something contractors have dealt with for decades. The pandemic certainly exaggerated the impact of shortages, but there were fewer and fewer recruits even before the Great Recession. With an aging labor force and a huge demand for labor, the shortage has reached an all-time high.

Being strategic with the workforce is more important than ever before to maximize current efforts and predict labor capacity for the coming months/years. The difficulty of the job is amplified because of inefficient manual processes that silo data, making it hard to collaborate. In a survey done by SmartBrief and Bridgit, 70% of surveyed contractors said they’re allocating their workforce for the next two months, and not much after that. Also, 46% said they don’t have adequate time to hire when the project needs it.

These statistics tell us that workforce planning has become reactive, leaving operations teams and human resources scrambling to fill gaps, causing project delays due to workforce limitations, and rushed hires that may not be the best fit for the company.

Being proactive and planning your workforce months, or years, in advance can prevent these problems and equip contractors with the foresight to handle constraints before they arise.

3 Ways to Combat Labor Shortages

Planning for Project Pursuits Is a Must

Many contractors make the mistake of only planning awarded projects. Including pursuits and projects that are likely to be awarded can provide proactive insight into staffing complications that may arise. In the same Bridgit survey, 86% of contractors said they have bid on projects only to find they don’t have the people to actually complete the job. Clearly, the difficulty of predicting and planning labor is pervasive throughout the industry. Labor shortages can be immediately alleviated by adding pursuits in your planning, avoiding complications that can catch your team by surprise.

Another benefit to planning pursuits is an improved bid-win ratio. According to 1st Source Bank, a bid-win ratio is “the winning rate at which you successfully bid or propose on construction projects.” For example, a 6:1 bid-win ratio means you win one out of every six projects you bid on.

Because of the resources that go into each project bid, having a lower ratio is ideal, but this changes from company to company. Planning labor for pursuits can help to improve your ratio because you’ll have a wider view of your capacity to take on new jobs. As this capacity improves over time, winning bids happens more often, and the cost of losing bids declines. Understanding how you win work can help you grow sustainably and stay proactive with hiring and upskilling internally.

Recruitment

Labor shortages can also be mitigated by having a recruitment strategy informed by your project plans. The more time and foresight your HR and recruitment teams have, the more likely they will find a quality candidate that fits well in your company. Having systems in place that provide insight into when people are coming off jobs, when jobs are starting, and what the workforce demands for pursuit projects are is the best way to provide that foresight.

Hiring can be rushed, but if you’re looking to attract and retain skilled workers, HR needs enough leeway to develop a recruitment plan. This plan includes the job description, publishing the job, working with recruiters and job boards, conducting interviews, and screening applicants.

Proactively recruiting mitigates the costs of replacing an employee that wasn’t a good fit. According to Busy Busy, the turnover cost for laborers making $30,000 or less, can be up to 16% of their annual salary. For employees earning about $50,000, the turnover cost is 20% of their salary. For specialized jobs like superintendents, engineers, and project managers, turnover costs can be as high as 213%—that’s a cost of $213,000 on a $100,000 salary.
