DBE and Minority Business Workshop Addresses Trends and Challenges in California's Post-Proposition 209 Era

DBE, women-owned and minority-owned businesses, and government contract compliance representatives received legal updates in a workshop convened on Friday, May 4, in San Francisco by the Bay Area Contract Compliance Officers Association (BACCOA).

The workshop, the second of four workshops scheduled for this year, featured highly-regarded attorneys engaged in litigation, authorship and advocacy within their specializations, all related at some level to the continuing impact of California's Proposition 209 initiative.

Workshop attendees were welcomed by BACCOA president Estela Tarano, who outlined the day's program, shared BACCOA's history and goals, and presented the speakers. The workshop topics included a primer on disparity studies used in justifying DBE program goals in most federally-funded contracts; an overview of legal issues surrounding local employment policies, as with San Francisco's Local Business Enterprise program, which mandates local hiring; and developments in the courts that impact the civil rights of various groups and businesses.

Disparity studies and DBE program design and implementation issues

Oakland-based attorney Colette Holt, of Colette Holt & Associates, kicked off the presentation powerfully with a critical look at the history and utility of federal DBE (disadvantaged business enterprise) programs. Holt, former deputy corporation counsel for the city of Chicago, Illinois, laid out a cardinal caution for DBE program participants: "You cannot over-document."

Drawing on her broad experience in defending affirmative action programs and in counseling private firms on compliance with diversity requirements, Holt provided a dynamic tutorial on the mechanics of DBE and related minority- and women-owned business enterprises (MBE, WBE) and the programs that support them: "You're in the door but you're stuck in one room," she advised, adding, in highlighting the transient integrity of the affirmative action environment, "You've made the introduction but they're not taking you on tour."

To public agencies, Holt shared that in analyzing and defending their programs, "Adding and subtracting is not an analysis...arithmetic is not econometrics."

Holt, an author and frequent media commentator, received her B.A. in Philosophy from Yale University and her J.D. from University of Chicago Law School. She is a former adjunct professor at Loyola University School of Law and

Local employment policies

Julian Gross, principal at the Law Office of Julian Gross, San Francisco, addressed "targeted hiring policies, not just local hiring," particularly in relationship to local employment policies and the many project labor agreements popping up across the state. Gross, considered the leading attorney in the nation on community benefits agreements, praised the City of Los Angeles Department of Public Works for including and enforcing targeted hiring in its PLA (project labor agreement). He also lauded the City and County of San Francisco having "the strongest local hiring policy in the country," buttressed not by goals but by requirements.

Gross proceeded to dissect the myths associated with targeted hiring practices, the apprenticeship programs connection

FHLBank San Francisco Now Accepting Applications from Members for $1 Million in Predevelopment Funding

AHEAD Grants Support Targeted Economic Development and Community Stability Initiatives

The Federal Home Loan Bank of San Francisco (FHLBank San Francisco) is now accepting grant applications for its 2012 Access to Housing and Economic Assistance for Development (AHEAD) Program, which supports targeted economic development initiatives and affordable housing projects during their critical conception and early development stages. The 2012 application deadline is June 4, 2012.

AHEAD grants are made through Bank members to local community groups initiating projects or programs aimed at fostering economic development and promoting community stability and self-sufficiency by:

- creating or preserving jobs,
- facilitating improvements to public or private infrastructure, or
- producing housing or providing social services or other benefits for low- to moderate-income households and neighborhoods.

"In this environment of diminishing resources for community development, the Bank is proud to be able to make $1 million available to support our members' involvement in promoting economic development, stability, and self-sufficiency in the communities they serve," said Marietta Núñez, Vice President, Community Lending, at FHLBank San Francisco. "Previous grants have gone to a variety of innovative and effective projects that are now producing jobs and other benefits, bringing hope to hard-hit communities. We look forward to seeing more such solutions."

AHEAD is designed to help good ideas get off the ground. Funds can be used to finance a variety of start-up costs, such as studies and project plans, architectural and other professional services, or organizational and capacity-

Bad Service Incites Customer Revolt

This issue of bad customer service won't leave me in peace. Two reader e-mails that I received this week dramatically prove the point. The first was a copy of a cleverly drafted, 17-page, PowerPoint presentation ("Yours Is A Very Bad Hotel") detailing the abysmally poor service that a team of business travelers received as they were checking in at a Houston property of a prominent national hotel chain. To reprise briefly, our merry band of travelers arrived late for check in only to learn that their guaranteed rooms had been given away. Apparently, Mike, the night clerk, was rude and unhelpful as night clerks quite often are wont to be. In response, and with no other outlet for satisfaction or retribution, the complaining duo drafted a witty but powerful PowerPoint presentation outlining the events, lambasting the hotel chain, vowing never to return and requesting that anybody who receives the PowerPoint presentation pass it along to friends virally. In the rarified world of customer service consulting, TQM, Baldrige Awards, Six Sigma, etc., the PowerPoint presentation has become an underground hit... must-have, must-read. Tens of thousands have passed it on virally.

Callers expressing outrage have besieged the Houston hotel and its national headquarters.

The PowerPoint presentation provides the mistreated and the impotent with a powerful means of venting and seeking revenge. Every traveler who has been similarly mishandled will nod in agreement upon viewing the presentation and proceed to pass it on with glee to friends and associates (just as I have done). When it's all over, the actions of one stupid, untrained and ill-suited-to-the-job night clerk will succeed in spreading a powerful negative message to hundreds of thousands of potential customers and, in the process, do irreparable damage to the hotel brand. Ah, the beauty of the Internet.

Another reader writes with undisguised anger of her manhandling at the airport by the security drones whose empathy for the traveler and awareness of the need for customer service is on a par with the best that Stalinist Russia had to offer. She talks of the rudeness, the barking of orders, the ordering off of shoes, the conscientious invasion of body by pat down, in open view, and the overall assault on dignity that $8 hour will buy you in today's marketplace. I can sympathize with the writer. I, too, have had bag contents strewn about for the world to view; ordered to take off my shoes, had tweezers and nail file loudly confiscated with the satisfaction that another threat to society has had his evil intentions thwarted by the just and vigilant, and bodily frisked with the seriousness and intensity that only of an FBI search could match.

The criticism and blame in both cases cannot be leveled solely at the "front counter" employee. They're only as good as they've been trained and motivated. With the exception of a couple of high-end groups, like the Four Seasons, Ritz-Carlton Hotels and Leading Hotels of the World, most hotel chains still haven't mastered the elementary process of checking a guest in and out with speed, courtesy and a smile. They say they do, but they don't. And the failure can be traced to two primary causes... inadequate training and lack of an obsessive culture, which loudly proclaims, "the customer comes first."

This airport security fiasco will have to be addressed very quickly. Even though the government has responsibility for establishing the process and hiring the screeners, the airlines must step up to the plate and demand proper treatment for the air traveler on whom they rely. Even at $8 hour, security screeners, irrespective of race, color or creed, can be taught the fundamentals of politeness and customer empathy. Somebody has to take on the role of surrogate for the downtrodden air traveler and that somebody has to be the airlines. Up to this point, airlines have viewed their passengers (at least those not sitting in first class) as cattle to be moved from point A to B with the least bodily injury or psychological bruising. Like prisoners, in restraint, they were to be watered and fed the bare minimum to survive the trip. The airlines must be made to realize that their responsibility encompasses the total travel experience and that includes the time on the plane as well as the task of getting to it. My fondest hope would see the Disney Company take over airport security. Screeners with mouse ears would be a small price to pay for a friendly, speedy transaction.

The lesson for the marketer is a basic one...mess with the customer at your peril. Even as captive consumers, we'll find a way of striking back. We'll attack you virally, demonize your brand and withhold our dollars where we can. As marketers, you're left to career development, and application of the Privileges and Immunities Clause of Article IV of the U.S. Constitution (which prohibits discrimination against residents of other states in hiring). Having drafted local hiring and employment policies, and worked on living wage policies, DBE policies, and other community economic development initiatives, Gross brought the weight of his legal expertise to the topic.

After receiving his B.A. in Philosophy (concentration in philosophy of law), with High Distinction, in 1989 from University of Virginia, Gross completed his J.D. at Boalt Hall School of Law, University of California at Berkeley, in 1994, graduating in the top eleven percent of his class. He was a practitioner in residence at University of California, Hastings School of Law from 2008 to 2010.

Current issues and policies impacting small businesses

Oren Sellstrom is the associate director of litigation for the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights, based in San Francisco. He energized the room with "(California) Prop 209 does not prohibit all race-conscious measures." In an era of uncertainty over application of race- and gender-conscious affirmative action programs in the wake of the voter-approved repeal of same, this represented the glimmer in a sky of gloom.

Sellstrom expanded the topic in adding that Proposition 209, the anti-affirmative action initiative, applied only to public entities. Further, in a nod to Colette Holt's earlier presentation on building defensible DBE programs, Sellstrom noted that "anecdotal evidence is powerful and critical" when presented to the courts.

The trend of the last decade of public agencies migrating to race- and gender-neutral small business enterprise (SBE) programs, emulating, in many respects, the federal government's Small Business Administration's 8-A program, was also discussed. Sellstrom observed that, while SBEs are more flexible and rising in numbers, participation plummets when race- and gender-conscious measures are revoked (in lieu of SBE programs).

Most telling, perhaps, was Sellstrom's final comment: "What exists on paper is only half the battle (if that), especially in the absence of committed leadership."

Mr. Sellstrom represents a coalition of minority-owned business groups seeking equal opportunity in public contracting. He is engaged in extensive litigation and legislative advocacy on this issue, including on the scope and reach of Proposition 209.

Sellstrom is a 1992 magna cum laude graduate of Harvard Law School.

John Avalos, Public Service Dream Advocate

The workshop was capped with BACCOA's presentation of its Public Service Dream Advocate award to John Avalos, supervisor, City and County of San Francisco.

In making the presentation on behalf of BACCOA, board member Beverly Johnson, contract equity manager for

principal at the Law Office of Julian Gross, San Francisco

East Bay Municipal Utility District and long-time minority business enterprise advocate, acknowledged Mr. Avalos' extensive, significant and selfless service throughout his time in the Bay Area.

Avalos worked as an educator and counselor with the San Francisco Conservation Corps and the Columbia Park Boys and Girls Club. There he taught high school equivalency and college prep classes. While studying for his master's degree in social work, Avalos interned at the Mission Neighborhood Health Center in the adult medicine and HIV/AIDS clinic.

Born in Wilmington, California, Avalos is a third-generation Mexican-American and the first from his family to graduate with a university degree, earning his bachelor's degree in English literature, with honors, in 1989 from the University of California at Santa Barbara.

Consistent with the workshop's theme, it was noted that Supervisor Avalos sponsored and has been a strong advocate for the City and County of San Francisco's Local Hiring Ordinance for Construction.

BACCOA president Estela Tarano wrapped up the workshop by thanking the presenters, participants, and Supervisor Avalos. For the presenters, too, she added, "Words are not enough to thank you for being so professional and passionate about what you do; that is what makes you excellent in your fields of endeavor." Tarano went on to thank the participants, as well, for their support and attendance in making the workshop successful.

Slides bulleting the speakers' presentations are available on the BACCOA web site at www.BACCOA.net.

One workshop participant Bernida Reagan, of Merriwether & Williams Insurance Services, assessed it this way: "It was important that both issues, small and minority business challenges and the current state of local hiring statutes, were covered at the same meeting." Reagan, former director of social responsibility for the Port of Oakland, is now the director of community and client relations for Merriwether & Williams. In that role, she oversees public works bonding and financing services for clients in San Diego, Los Angeles and the San Francisco Bay Area. She added, "It's important that the issues are seen from employment, community, and agency perspectives."

BACCOA's next workshop is scheduled for October 5, 2012, at the Santa Clara Valley Transportation Authority, San Jose, California. The topic is to be announced at a later date and will be posted on the organization's web site.

SBA Hosts Business Matchmaking to Link Small Businesses with Federal Contract Opportunities during National Small Business Week

The U.S. Small Business Administration will host a business matchmaking event allowing small businesses to discuss procurement opportunities with major corporations and federal agencies during National Small Business Week on May 22 in Washington, DC.

The event will give small businesses from across the country gathered for National Small Business Week an opportunity to have face-to-face meetings with prime contractors and federal agencies to learn about specific contracting and subcontracting opportunities. This is part of SBA's Procurement Day which will also feature federal contracting panels on gaining access to federal prime contracting and subcontracting opportunities.

The business matchmaking sessions are open to small businesses that register for National Small Business Week. Small businesses must have a DUNS number, which can be obtained by going to the DUNS official Web site at (www.dnb.com/us), and must be registered in Central Contractor Registration (www.ccr.gov), the federal government's official database of small businesses wishing to secure federal contracts.

The face-to-face matchmaking meetings will be 15 minutes, matching approximately 150 businesses and 20 buyers based on their compatibility and the buying needs of the federal agencies and corporations. Small business owners interested in participating must first register for National Small Business Week at www.nationalsmallbusinessweek.com.

Once registered, they will receive a code to allow them to complete their business matchmaking registration at: <https://nsbw.mybusinessmatches.com>. New Report: Tax Credits Could Help More Than 375,000 CA Small Businesses Provide Health Coverage for 2.4 Million Workers

Affordable Care Act Program Helps California Small Businesses Offer Benefits and Compete Against Larger Companies for Best Talent

More than 2.4 million California workers are employed by the more than 375,000 small businesses in the state eligible for $1.8 billion in tax credits in the federal healthcare reform, according to a new report released today. The tax credit helps small businesses pay for health coverage for their employees. A major obstacle to coverage, the report notes, is that many small business owners are unaware of these tax credits because of the noisy—and often misleading—debate over healthcare reform.

The tax credit program is outlined in a report released today by Small Business Majority and the consumer group Families USA. The report contains detailed information on the number of eligible employers and employees in California whom the program could benefit. It also includes the total dollar amount of tax credits that could be provided to small businesses in the state.

In general, businesses with fewer than 25 full-time middle-class workers are now eligible to receive a tax credit of up to 35 percent of the cost of the health insurance they provide for their workers. In 2014, the size of the credit will increase to cover up to half of the cost of health insurance provided to workers.

The tax credit was included in the Affordable Care Act to help the smallest businesses offer coverage—those who traditionally have the most difficult time doing so. Nationally, in 2011, only 71 percent of small businesses with 10 to 24 workers offered coverage to their workers; among small businesses with fewer than 10 workers, only 48 percent offered coverage. By contrast, 99 percent of businesses with 200 or more workers offered coverage.

The following are among the key findings of the report, titled “Good Business Sense.”

- More than 375,000 small businesses in California (70.1 percent of California businesses with fewer than 25 workers) are eligible for tax credits to help with the cost of health coverage for their workers for the 2011 tax year
- More than 158,000 small businesses are eligible for the maximum tax credit when they file their 2011 taxes
- More than two in five (42.2 percent of) small businesses that are eligible for this tax credit are eligible for the maximum tax credit when they file their 2011 taxes

The following are key report findings about California workers.

- More than 2.4 million Californians are employed by a small business that is eligible for a tax credit for the 2011 tax year
- Of these workers, more than 759,000 are employed by a small business that is eligible for the maximum credit

- The total value of the tax credits that are available to eligible small businesses for 2011 is more than $1.8 billion, an average of $752 per worker
- The total value of the tax credits that are available to small businesses eligible for the maximum credit is more than $759.1 million, an average of $1,000 per worker

The report also contains data by race and ethnicity on the number of workers who can benefit from the tax credits. As the report makes clear, however, workers and employers can only begin to benefit when they become aware of the tax credit program.

Among small businesses with low-wage workers, the likelihood of offering coverage is even lower. As a result, lower-wage workers employed by small businesses are much more likely to be uninsured than other working Californians.

“We know from our opinion polling that small businesses in our state want to offer their employees coverage but many of them can’t afford it. The tax credits will make it easier for small businesses to offer coverage, which makes their businesses more competitive and boosts their ability to create jobs and drive economic growth,” said John Arensmeyer, CEO of Small Business Majority.

“Small businesses seeking to provide health coverage for their employees have traditionally faced health insurance premiums that are significantly higher than those for large businesses,” said Ron Pollack, executive director of Families USA. These high premiums are due to higher administrative costs and premiums per employee in the small group insurance market, he said.

“The tax credit program, a provision of the Affordable Care Act, now makes it possible for small business to compete with large employers,” Pollack said. “This is great news for these small companies, who can now offer health benefits when competing for talent in the job market. Just as importantly, it’s great for workers and their families who will now have access to affordable health care.”

“We also know from our polling that the majority of small businesses don’t know these credits exist to help them,” Arensmeyer said. “The best way to serve small business owners in California is to educate them about this provision so they can participate in and benefit from it.”

Families USA and Small Business Majority contracted with The Lewin Group to develop the estimates used in the report. What Is A Good Business Credit Score?

It’s hard to imagine that just a couple of decades ago, most people couldn’t tell you the first thing about credit scores. Of course in the years since then, we’ve been bombarded with ads for scoring services practically everywhere we look. As a result of the increased awareness, most consumers know what a good credit score range is nowadays.

But what about business credit scores? Because they’re rarely talked about, the vast majority of people have absolutely no clue what a good business credit score is. Here’s what you need to know about them.

Numerical Range

Unlike a consumer FICO score which runs on a 300-850 range, a business score operates on a completely different range – from 1 to 100 for a Dunn & Bradstreet PAYDEX Score (which is the most popular business scoring model used today).

So what’s a good business credit score? Well it’s a lot more intuitive, that’s for sure. Think of it as letter grading, where every 10% equals a different grade: 90-100 is excellent, 80-89 is good, 70-79 is fair, and so forth. Most lenders like to see a 75 or higher.

Scoring Formula

With consumer credit scores, there are dozens of different components factored into the algorithm. However the PAYDEX formula is relatively straightforward – it’s based on how quickly the business pays its creditors and suppliers. The faster you pay, the higher your score will be. To give you an idea, here are the payment expectations for the first five tiers:

- 100 – Payments may come early
- 90 – Payments generally come within early payment

discount period

- 80 – Payment is prompt
- 70 – Payment comes 15 days beyond terms
- 60 – Payment comes 22 days beyond terms

In order for the score to be calculated, D&B requires you to have at least five trade accounts on record with them. The formula gives greater weight to accounts for higher amounts. For example, if you have a trade account at $10,000/month, that’s going to be weighed much more heavily than two accounts at $100/month.

Other Models

Although the D&B PAYDEX is by far the industry leader, the credit bureaus Equifax and Experian are also popular for providing business scores. Their algorithms tend to be more complex since they also factor in things like credit utilization and company demographics.

Equifax’s Small Business Credit Risk Score – This is a bit different than PAYDEX, in that it focuses on how likely a business will incur a 90+ day delinquency or charge-off on financial service accounts within the next 12 months. Its range is 101-992.

Equifax’s Small Business Credit Risk Score for Suppliers – Same goal as above, but this one is for suppliers. The range is 101-816.

Equifax Business Failure Risk Score – As the name implies, this specifically analyzes the likelihood of whether or not a company will go under within the next 12 months. Its range is 1,000-1,880.

Experian’s Intelliscore Plus – This is another model that focuses on the chance of a company being 90+ days late (or worse) within the next 12 months. For example with a score of 96-100, the bad debt rate is 0.83% (99.7% good debt). The range on this one is 1-100, which is the same as PAYDEX.

These are some of the most common, but there are other models on the market too.

More Than a Number?

Something to keep in mind is that your business creditworthiness goes far deeper than just a number. All the number does is predict the likelihood of payment on a trade account. If you think your loan or credit card application will be approved solely based on that, think again. D&B reports also assign ratings on your report for financial strength, number of employees, and more. You can view them here.

Furthermore, many creditors will do things “the old-fashioned way” and check references, in addition to the score. I have a friend who worked at a small skin care product manufacturer with about $10 million in annual sales. When selling their products to distributors, he said the primary way they gauged creditworthiness (in addition to scoring) was by requesting letters of recommendations from other trade accounts.

Meanwhile when it comes to loans, credit cards and mortgages, your company typically will need to have a robust credit file and revenue history. Learn more about getting SBA loans.
