Five Tips for Protecting Your Intellectual Property in Global Business

This post originally appeared on International Trade Administration Tradeology blog.

Ken Mouradian is the Director of the International Trade Administration's Orlando Export Assistance Center.

You spent the time and money to build your business, including the development of products and services (patents, trade secrets and copyrights), business methods (trade secrets), brands (trademarks and service marks), and your presence on the Internet (trademarks and associated domain names, copyrights). Why wouldn't you protect these Intellectual Property (IP) assets from unauthorized use?

Stopfakes.gov is your portal to resources for protecting intellectual property. Many small businesses are at a disadvantage in not having the expertise or resources to prevent theft of their intellectual property in the global marketplace. So in recognition of World IP Day on April 26, here are some simple, practical measures that any exporter can take to protect their IP assets:

1. Conduct an IP audit. An IP audit will document the assets that you own, the assets that you may be acquiring, and how you're using other people's IP. It should support your export marketing plan, as an IP audit allows you to make business decisions about which assets to protect in each market. It doesn't have to be elaborate; and it's something that you can do yourself.

The World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) publishes a very easy to understand, practical guide to conducting an IP audit.

You can also access a handy Intellectual Property Training Module and IP Awareness Assessment at STOPfakes.gov.

2. Own your business... all of it! If you allow your foreign business partner to register your IP, in most foreign countries, they become the "right holder." You need to register your own IP assets and record trademark and copyright registrations (and in some countries, design patents) with the customs administration to block the import and export of infringing items.

3. Know your partners. Your local U.S. Export Assistance Center can help you to qualify existing or potential foreign business partners. Include provisions in your contracts that require the use of original and unaltered products and preclude the partners' registration of your IP.
4. Monitor the use of your IP. Plan to visit the market regularly; and use track-and-trace technology like RFID or bar codes to make it easier to audit products and spot fakes. Monitor domain names,
