

Mayor London Breed And Climate Mayors Representing 407 Cities Denounce Trump Administration's Proposed Rollback Of Federal Fuel Efficiency Standards And Attack On California Waiver

Mayor London N. Breed

Mayor London N. Breed and Climate Mayors from across America condemned the Trump Administration's new proposal to weaken vehicle efficiency standards and rescind California's waiver right to set strong greenhouse gas regulations. The proposal would hinder U.S. efforts to curb auto emissions and the resulting air pollution.

Climate Mayors, the national coalition of 407 U.S. Mayors dedicated to pursuing solutions to global warming, denounced this unprecedented attack on both the environment and states' rights, and vowed to continue moving forward on transportation policies that help reduce the impact of climate pollution.

"California's common sense vehicle emissions requirements are designed to improve air quality in our communities and reduce pollution disrupting our planet," said San Francisco Mayor London Breed. "I hope the EPA learns from the world's leading cities, states, and businesses gathering in San Francisco for the September 2018 Global Climate Action Summit as we demonstrate how accelerating emission reductions can lead to healthier communities and a stronger economy."

On September 12-14, 2018, California Governor Jerry Brown will host leaders and people from around the world in San Francisco for the Global Climate Action Summit. The Summit will celebrate the achievements of cities, states, companies, investors, and citizens with respect to climate action, including advancing the decarbonization of our transportation sector. It will also serve as an opportunity for deeper worldwide commitments and accelerated action from countries that can put the world on track to realize the historic Paris Agreement and reduce global emissions by 2020.

In April of this year, Climate Mayors issued a statement as a response to the EPA's announcement that it would be reevaluating the federal vehicle emissions standards currently in place. Climate Mayors unequivocally condemned the attack and plan to submit public comment on today's proposal.

"We cannot sacrifice the future of our planet on the altar of short-sighted and dangerous policies that serve narrow interests," said Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti. "Extremely narrow interests: Automakers, consumers, and environmentalists agree that this rollback on progress helps no one and never should have seen the light of day. Their proposal directly threatens to stall the progress we have made in Los Angeles to take toxic fumes out of our air. This Administration wants us to pay more at the pump while ignoring the constant dangers that climate change poses to our country, to our children, and to generations ahead — another example of the disconnect between the thinking in Washington and the everyday needs of American families."

"Boston is committed to addressing climate change head-on, and today we reaffirm our promise to become carbon neutral by 2050," said Boston Mayor Martin J. Walsh. "Fighting climate change means fighting for all those affected by worsening air quality, extreme heat, eroding coastlines — issues that will continue to impact residents for generations to come. Removing environmental protections like the CAFE standards is not the answer. As Mayor, I will continue to work with cities across the country and around the world to uphold the tenets of the Paris Agreement and protect Boston against the very real impacts of climate change."

"The rollback by EPA of clean car standards represents the latest giveback to the interests of Big Oil at the expense of clean air and a healthy planet," said New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio. "I am standing alongside other Climate Mayors as we take action to clean our own fleets and pursue climate action to the benefit of all our residents."

"I was proud to help strengthen federal emissions standards when I served in the Obama administration and am proud to stand with my

by Odette Pollar

20 Tips to Stay Organized

No matter how large your organizing project may seem, it is manageable and it will move along more quickly than you think. Start slowly. Do not plan to complete it at one sitting or on the same day. To keep your energy up and your enthusiasm in place, stop when you get tired. Return to the task when you are refreshed. This is better than forcing yourself into a marathon sorting job. The task will be less overwhelming if you break the project into small chunks of time. Maintenance is the key to success. Getting items back to their home quickly will ensure that you don't face another overwhelming organizing project next year.

1. Commit yourself to making decisions now about what to do with each piece of paper. Handle paper only once. Ask yourself, "Do I really need it?" If so, file the document at once in the broadcast category to which it refers.
2. Keep close to you only the things you use frequently.
3. Store little-used items farther away. Even on a shelf, place the least-used items in the back. Keep those items you use frequently in the front, for easy retrieval.
4. When clearing the top of surfaces, start with one stack of papers and sort from the top down. When finished with each stack, you will see a clear work space, and your progress will be easy to monitor. This forces you to decide on each piece of paper and when done, you will see the top of your desk again.
5. Spend 15 minutes twice a day clearing out your in-box. Don't let it turn into a holding, aging or procrastinating tray. Sort incoming mail into categories by priority or by action.
6. Break the habit of writing things down on numerous scraps of paper. Write notes in the appropriate place the first time; in the client file, onto the calendar or on your to-do list.
7. Be realistic about the amount of information you can read and absorb. Limit the number of subscriptions you take, and copy articles you intend to save as soon as you read them. Pass the periodical along to someone else, throw it away or recycle it.
8. Make lists regularly. Daily To-Do lists, as well as larger project lists help you get and stay organized. Use checklists to help do routine things more easily and quickly.
9. Say "No" more often. The best way to get off-track is to say "Yes" to every request. Each time you agree to a new demand, you say no to a previous commitment.
10. Don't buy anything unless you have a place to put it. To keep excess at bay, if you add an item, you must remove an item.
11. Label everything that contains things: binders, folders, suitcases, etc.
12. Organize bookcases by placing similar materials together.
13. Schedule multiple appointments for the same day instead of spreading them throughout the week. This reduces your travel time and parking hassles.
14. Buy enough greeting cards for special occasions like birthdays, anniversaries, get-well and thank-you at one time so that you need not make special trips to the store. Although there are e-cards, in the mind of the receiver, are those as special as a physical card?
15. Keep two files, one for instruction manuals and one for guarantees. Staple the receipt to the guarantee or warranty page. Then when you need to return an item, all the information is handy. Purge periodically for appliances that have worn out, broken, or been sent to charity.
16. Label photos with the date and people's names as soon as they are developed.
17. Keep a pair of scissors near where you read newspapers and magazines. You can easily clip those articles you wish to save.
18. Keep only one project or file open on your desk at any time. This reduces the likelihood of stray papers becoming attached to the incorrect document and misfiled.
19. When unsure about a what to do with a document, ask yourself, "What would I do if it were one week before vacation?" Act accordingly.
20. Clear the top of your desk at the end of each day. It completes the day's work, makes a clean space for you to see the next morning and stops paper buildup.

SBA Now Accepting 2019 National Small Business Week Awards Nominations

The U.S. Small Business Administration is now accepting nominations for its 2019 National Small Business Week Awards, including the annual Small Business Person of the Year. Since 1963, National Small Business Week has recognized the outstanding achievements of America's small businesses for their contributions to their local communities, and to our nation's economy.

"This is a great opportunity to recognize those small businesses that have contributed significantly to their local communities, developed creative products or made advances with innovative technologies," SBA Administrator Linda McMahon said. "A National Small Business Week award is one of the nation's highest honors for small business achievement. I encourage you to visit our dedicated website www.sba.gov/nsbw to download forms, criteria and guidelines for submitting a nomination. I look forward to your nomination and wish you the best of luck."

SBA Awards given in celebration of National Small Business Week on May 5-11, 2019 include the following:

Small Business Person of the Year

One from each of the 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and Guam.

- Small Business Exporter of the Year
 - Phoenix Awards for Disaster Recovery
- Phoenix Award for Small Business Disaster Recovery

Phoenix Award for Outstanding Contributions to Disaster Recovery, Public Official

Phoenix Award for Outstanding Contributions to Disaster Recovery, Volunteer

- Federal Procurement Awards

Small Business Prime Contractor of the Year

Small Business Subcontractor of the Year

Dwight D. Eisenhower Awards for Excellence (for large prime contractors who use small businesses as suppliers and contractors)

8(a) Graduate of the Year

- Jody C. Raskind Lender of the Year

Mayor London Breed And Climate Mayors Representing 407 Cities Denounce Trump Administration's Proposed Rollback Of Federal Fuel Efficiency Standards And Attack On California Waiver

colleagues in cities across America today to keep up the fight for clean air and a more sustainable future,” said Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel. “While the Trump EPA is asleep at the wheel, Chicago will continue to increase the size of our electric vehicle fleet and modernize mass transit because it’s the right thing to do for our city and the responsible thing to do for future generations.”

“Seattle will continue embracing the future of transportation and clean energy innovation. Now is the time to double down—not pull back—on policies like fuel economy standards that save money, protect our children’s health, preserve our environment, and create economic opportunity today and long into the future,” said Seattle Mayor Jenny Durkan. “Cities are dealing with the negative impacts of climate change today, and we don’t have the luxury of denying climate science. Seattle is committed to protecting our community and standing against the Trump administration’s dangerous, irresponsible agenda.”

“Fuel economy standards make our air cleaner, make our dollars go farther, and make sense for Houstonians,” said Houston Mayor Sylvester Turner. “Transportation is responsible for 48% of Houston’s greenhouse gas emissions – the highest per capita of all US cities – and something we must address to move our city forward. Thankfully, technology is on our side and Climate Mayors across the country are committed to finding innovative solutions to climate challenges.”

“Baltimore strongly supports requirements for cleaner vehicles to combat the effects of climate change and to reduce the health burdens faced by neighborhoods near busy roadways,” said Baltimore Mayor Catherine E. Pugh.

Transportation is the largest and fastest-growing source of U.S. greenhouse gas emissions. To address this challenge, the Obama Administration finalized new fuel economy standards in 2012 with the support of auto companies. Following the Trump Administration’s initial efforts to weaken the national standards, seventeen states and the District of Columbia — representing over 40 percent of the U.S. car market — filed a lawsuit challenging the potential rollbacks.

To demonstrate demand for low-emission vehicles, San Francisco and 30 other U.S. cities announced last year a collective interest in acquiring 114,000 electric vehicles, trucks, and equipment for their municipal fleets. Climate Mayors are committed to leading the fight against climate change and will continue to hasten the transition to more efficient and zero emissions vehicles.

Climate Mayors, founded in 2014, is a bipartisan, peer-to-peer network of U.S. Mayors representing 70 million Americans from 47 states committed to adopting, honoring, and upholding the goals of the Paris Climate Agreement. Climate Mayors are working together to demonstrate leadership on climate change through meaningful actions in their communities, and to express and build political will for effective federal and global policy.
