

American Express Rewards Available for Office Supplies

Throughout the summer, American Express cardholders may have the ability to earn great rewards on office supplies.

By Shannon Serpette,

People who need to stock up on office supplies might want to look over the deals being offered by American Express right now. Those who have to buy office supplies anyway might as well score these great perks for their purchases.

These offers might not be available on all American Express credit cards, so check with the issuer before you shop. With that in mind, here is a closer look at some of the Amex rewards that are available for a limited time.

Check out these 5 American Express rewards options on office supplies:

5 Amex Rewards for Office Supplies

Amazon Kindle Unlimited

Offices that can benefit from having an Amazon Kindle Unlimited subscription might want to check out this deal. When a cardholder uses their Amex card to get an Amazon Kindle Unlimited subscription by Sept. 30, 2018, at amazon.com/kuamex, they'll get 30 percent off the subscription when they go through the checkout process.

Best Buy

In order to compete in this day and age, offices need to stay up to date on electronics. They need computers, phones, flash drives, printers, and more.

Cardholders who have to stock a home office or who own their own business might be excited about this Best Buy offer. For every dollar spent on purchases at BestBuy.com by Oct. 31, 2018, members will get one additional membership rewards point.

Dell

If a cardholder's office needs a new computer, they can shop and get a statement credit with an offer from Dell and Amex. This is a great time to update office computers that cost a lot of time and money by running too slowly.

Cardholders can get a 10 percent back statement credit when they use their enrolled business card for purchases online at Dell.com/amex. The purchases must be on eligible items, and they must be bought by Nov. 30, 2018. The limit one cardholder can receive in statement credits is $1,500—but that's enough to allow for some computer upgrades

National Construction Group Provides Over $100,000 To Puerto Rico Construction Workers To Help Cover Damages From Hurricane Maria

AGC Charities, Inc., the charitable arm of the Associated General Contractors of America, is providing 65 construction workers in Puerto Rico with $100,750 in donated funds to help cover losses they incurred as a result of Hurricane Maria. The checks, which amount to $1,550 per construction worker, are intended to help employees of firms that belong to the association cover the costs of uninsured and uncompensated damages caused by the storm.

"Contractors may do hard work, but they have soft hearts, especially when it comes to helping some of their own," said Dirk Elsperman the association's national senior vice president and Executive Vice President & COO of St. Louis, Mo.-based Tarlton Corporation. "These checks won't make everything right, but they will help these construction professionals get their lives back on track."

AGC Charities organized a nationwide fundraising campaign in the wake of Hurricane Maria and the damages it caused to help provide grants for employees of member firms impacted by the storm. Elsperman noted that the charitable group received an "overwhelming" response and raised over $100,000 dollars. The 65 grants are being awarded to individuals who work for firms that belong to the association who suffered significant, uncompensated Hurricane-related damages.

Dozens of construction firms, individuals and chapters of the association contributed to the effort. The AGC of Houston was the largest single donor, providing $50,000 for victims of Hurricane Maria as well as another $50,000 for victims of Hurricane Harvey. Other significant donors include the AGC Oregon-Columbia Chapter, the Associated Contractors of New Mexico and the General Contractors Association of Hawaii.

The association senior vice president presented a number of the checks in person today during visits to the annual convention of the association's local chapter, the AGC of Puerto Rico. The remaining checks will be mailed directly to the recipients, he added.

Elsperman noted that the national association created AGC Charities a decade ago to provide a single place where contractors could come together to help communities and the industry. In addition to providing the hurricane assistance grants, the charitable group also recognizes construction firms' good deeds through annual awards, and arranges a year-charitable construction project known as Operation Opening Doors.

The California High-Speed Rail Authority (Authority) is studying four alternatives as part of the environmental process for the Bakersfield to Palmdale Project Section. The Authority has continued to work with local stakeholders to incorporate refinements that further avoid or minimize potential impacts to existing facilities, land uses and environmental resources. Based on that refinement effort and the environmental review to date, the Authority would like to share the next steps in the Bakersfield to Palmdale Section, including the recommended Preferred Alternative and progress towards completing the Draft Environmental Impact Report/Environmental Impact Statement (EIR/EIS).

The Authority invites you to come and learn about the project and the range of alternatives being studied, also welcoming feedback on the Preferred Alternative. This is an opportunity to ask questions and provide input regarding effects to the environment, including biological resources, cultural resources, air quality, noise, community impacts, environmental justice and more. in the office, which in the long run might save productivity and money.

FedEx

When a cardholder needs office supplies shipped to them, they are usually at the mercy of whatever the carrier is going to charge. There aren't any sales when it comes to shipping costs.

The closest a business owner can get to receiving a discount on shipping is by using this FedEx offer. It allows cardholders 10 percent back as a statement credit every time they use their enrolled business card on eligible FedEx Freight purchases by Nov. 30, 2018. The limit any one cardholder can earn is $1,000 in total statement credits. This offer isn't eligible, however, for FedEx Freight Canada or FedEx Freight de Mexico.

There is also a second offer from FedEx. With this one, cardholders can receive 5% back as a credit on their statement every time they use their enrolled business card to buy services with FedEx Express and FedEx Ground.

The purchases must qualify, and the delivery must arrive by Nov. 30, 2018. Each cardholder is capped at a $1,000 limit for their statement credits.

Staples

For this American Express offer, cardholders receive 10% back on their credit card statement every time they use their eligible business card to buy items at Staples or Staples.com by Nov. 30, 2018. The most a cardholder can receive for a statement credit is $100.

Making the Most Out of Your Amex Rewards

If you're accumulating rewards thanks to your targeted spending deals, it's worth noting that there is one crucial step you can take to maximize your rewards – and that is paying your balance in full each month so you don't accrue interest charges. Paying interest charges will eat into your rewards, so it's important to avoid doing so whenever possible.

Smart Ways TO WORK

Chaos Everywhere: How to Help Disorganized Co-Workers

Has this ever happened to you? Entering your colleague's office and asking for a piece of information, produces a long wait filled with frantic searching sounds and paper shuffling. Amidst heavy sighs it is not unusual to be asked to return later once the errant item has been unearthed. Disorganization can be frustrating for the person with the paper pile as well as the poor soul waiting for the document. Whether this is an associate, a vendor or your boss, you must be able to deal with another person's lack of organization. Since getting irritated simply ages you but does not help, try these suggestions:

- Package information for the disorganized person. A series of individual communications is easily lost. Place all of the information related to an issue in a folder, envelope or brightly colored container. This will help them keep like things together.

- Allow extra time. Do not wait until the last minute to request information, a meeting or a report. For a meeting you request, allow an extra half-hour in your schedule to accommodate their possible tardiness. Similarly, if you need a decision next week let your co-worker know several days in advance. Lead time and reminders are helpful.
- Focus on the positive. Your disorganized colleague does have skills and excels in other areas. Be sure to compliment them on what they do well and do not become preoccupied with their weaknesses. Your colleague may be a genius at sales analysis, but poor at organizing paper. Be creative about finding ways to build on that person's strengths. Evaluate your tasks with a view to giving some of them to your colleague in areas where they can shine and reciprocate by taking some of their tasks that are easier for you.
- Identify motivations. Sometimes disorganization hides an underlying problem or concern. Is it the statistics involved with the monthly reports or something requiring a personal confrontation? Once you can identify the problem you are in a better position to offer assistance.

- Be clear - subtle hints, broad swipes, or humorous asides are often ineffective with a chronically disorganized person. Be direct and frank about the effect that the disorganization has on you. Ask about ways you can assist him/her in getting items to you promptly. If asked to help, be persistent and set up a schedule to work with the person. A single conversation or suggestion is not as helpful as setting up a three-month plan where you will check on progress every Friday.
- Promote learning. Many people need to learn organizational skills. Circulate literature about organizing, classes and resources around the office. Mention these at a staff meeting. To keep everybody interested and enthusiastic about getting organized, try spending five minutes at the end of the meeting discussing one thing people have done in the last week to organize or streamline their work.
- Offer assistance in planning and setting priorities. Providing help to a co-worker in ranking tasks will help that person focus on the things that are truly important. On large team projects, offer help with planning them out in detail. Meet weekly to go over the key items that need to be completed over the next five days.

- Anticipate problems. You can probably predict your colleagues' patterns -- when and where the shortfalls are likely to occur. For those who habitually underestimate the time projects take suggest an earlier start time. Set deadlines for major pieces of the project, not just the final due date. When getting a prompt response is difficult, wherever possible send memos or make calls indicating that you will move forward unless you hear otherwise by a certain date. This way they need only respond if there is a problem. Concentrate on systems or processes you can both follow to make your interactions smoother.

- Combat indecision - disorganized people often have difficulty making decisions. Offering too many choices can create paralysis. Limit choices of hotel locations for the conference to three or four only. Keep the pros and cons list of each site short as well.

- Praise often. Change is difficult. When you see progress, say something. Whenever you get a report early, offer your appreciation. Even if the step is a small one, they add up to big changes.
