Kilroy Realty Plans $250 Million Investment at Newly Acquired SF Site

By Greg Aragon

Kilroy Realty Corporation (KRC) announced July 8 that it has paid $78 million for one of the last fully entitled office development sites in San Francisco that is not yet leased. Located at 100 Hooper Street in the south of market area, the 3.3-acre site is fully designed and entitled for the development of a LEED Gold, low-rise, mixed-use creative campus that will consist of approximately 450,000 sq-ft.

The Hooper Street project features two large floor plate, concrete buildings totaling approximately 400,000 sq-ft. Kilroy says it will invest approximately $250 million incrementally on the development. The project will be approximately 80% office space and 20% PDR (production, distribution, and repair) space. KRC says it plans to commence construction at 100 Hooper later this year, subject to market conditions. Future design changes will be done in-house and a general contractor has yet to be selected.

By purchasing 100 Hooper, KRC now owns the last two remaining fully entitled office development sites in San Francisco that are not yet leased. Last month the company began construction on The Exchange at 16th in the Mission Bay submarket of San Francisco. This four-building project, which is targeting LEED Platinum, is still under design and is planned to include a green roof and ultra-low-flow toilets.

Both projects are well-positioned to take advantage of the strong tenant demand for new Class A creative space.

As part of the Hooper Street deal, the land will be sub-divided and about 50,000 sq-ft of additional stand-alone PDR space is expected to be owned and managed by PlaceMade, a non-profit subsidiary of SFMade that focuses on providing affordable space for manufacturers and other related industrial users in San Francisco.

The Hooper site, adjacent to Showplace Square, is in close proximity to some of the nation's premier companies and institutions, including California College of the Arts, the University of California, San Francisco, salesforce.com, Inc., Dolby Laboratories Inc., Airbnb Inc., Pinterest and Cisco Systems, Inc. Bounded by popular residential neighborhoods of the Dogpatch and Potrero Hill, the project will further benefit from the addition of San Francisco's Central Subway system, currently under construction.

"The combination of manufacturing applications from the PDR space and innovation-oriented uses from the creative office space will not only create terrific synergies for the project but will also generate diverse jobs for the community," said John Kilroy, chairman, president and CEO of Kilroy Realty in a press release.

Michelle Ngo, senior vice president and treasurer for Kilroy, told me that the company currently has a portfolio of nearly 6,000,000 sq-ft of both stabilized properties and development projects in San Francisco and the Bay Area, with the San Francisco area making up 50 % of this figure.

Tips on Buying an Existing Small Business or Franchise

The dream of owning a small business doesn't always mean starting from scratch. You can skip the headaches of creating a startup and jump to buying an established company. Purchasing a franchise offers another path to entrepreneurship. With either option, someone has already developed a solid foundation for a company. Here are some resources to help you decide if buying an existing independent small business or franchise is right for you.

Research Your Options

Even if a business seems successful on the outside, a closer inspection before purchasing is critical. In the SCORE podcast, "Buying a Business," mentor Norm Silverstein details how to thoroughly examine an existing company.

When you acquire an established business, you inherit important intangible assets, such as a customer base and brand recognition. Risk is potentially lower than owning a startup because you will have immediate cash flow. Also, the previous owners have hopefully ironed out the kinks in the beginning stages allowing you to focus on the future.

After finding an affordable, promising business, Silverstein recommends using a "due diligence" process to determine if the company is a right fit. Some of the financial factors to investigate include:

- Profit and loss statements from previous years
- Projected financial statement
- Last three years of tax returns
- Cancelled checks
- Lease conditions

You want to learn as much as possible about the business beyond what the seller tells you. An attorney, accountant and a SCORE mentor can advise you during this intensive process.

Ready to Purchase?

You found your dream business, which passed a thorough investigation. Now what? You must decide whether to purchase the business entity or its assets. These are the major differences:

- Buying the "business entity" entails buying the corporation or limited liability company (LLC). You inherit the assets and contracts but also its debts. You may not know what is lurking beneath the surface, such as tax liens or unpaid loans.
- Buying the "assets" means you are buying the tangible items like equipment and property. However, you must create a new company with new loans, leases and contracts as if the seller's business no longer exists.

For more details on the types of purchases, read the entire "Buying a Small Business: Assets vs. Entities" article.

Buying into a Community

Another road to small business ownership is purchasing a franchise. Bob Melberth, a franchisee coach, details the pros and cons in the SCORE podcast ap-

Tips on Buying an Existing Small Business

appropriately titled, "Franchising."

What exactly is a franchise? An entrepreneur buys the license of a larger trademarked company to sell its products or services. The new offshoot is backed by a well-known brand name, training and support from the larger company and fellow franchisees. Melberth says, "You're in business for yourself, not by yourself," highlighting the community aspect of owning a franchise.

With this established business structure, the success rate of a franchise is usually higher than an independent business. You don't need to be an expert in all aspects of running a company because the franchise provides specific guidelines to help sell their products. Even though it's a franchise, it's still your business.

Finding your ideal business can be a lengthy, involved process, but remember that you don't have to do it alone—a SCORE mentor can help you along the way. After thoroughly examining the foundation, you may find an existing independent company or franchise is the answer to your small business dreams.
