

How to Properly Vet New Construction Subcontractors

[Article was originally posted on www.constructconnect.com]

By Holly Welles,

Subcontractors fill various niches in the construction industry, bringing their specialized skills whenever and wherever they're needed to complete a project. As with most things, it's important to be careful before choosing a subcontractor for any particular job. What do business owners and project managers need to know to properly vet their new subcontractors before signing on the dotted line? Here are a few tips.

Check Their References

When seeking a new subcontractor, construction professionals should always request references. Most honest companies are happy to provide them, especially if they have a line of satisfied customers ready to sing their praises. Checking references gives general contractors the tools to learn more about these new subcontractors from the people they've worked for in the past.

It's no different than checking in with previous employers before hiring a new full-time employee. It can provide companies with a wealth of information to help them make smart decisions.

Verify Licensing

Most states require subcontractors to be licensed, bonded and insured before they're allowed to operate in that area. Construction managers should obtain the licensing information for any potential subcontractor and verify that information with the state.

Upholding these high standards might seem a little picky, especially with upwards of 80% of contractors having trouble finding skilled craft workers and subcontractors to complete their tasks. Without this paperwork, though, general contractors may find themselves on the hook for any mistakes the subcontractors make, so they should never hire anyone who isn't licensed, bonded and insured.

Check Safety Records

Finding a subcontractor who's focused on work-site safety should be a priority for all general contractors. Even if the subcontractor is at fault after an accident, the parent company could find themselves on the hook for a citation from the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) regardless.

Project managers should avoid companies with spotty safety records or a history of dangerous practices or accidents, even if their offer sounds too good to be true. Saving a little cash on the contract isn't worth the risk of accidents on the job site.

Request Everything in Writing

This tip is a helpful habit to get into and can protect both general contractors and subcontractors. Any and everything discussed should be put down in writing, signed, and dated by both parties. That way, if there is a conflict—especially one that makes it to court—there will be a paper trail outlining everything both parties agreed to.

This arrangement can be a useful vetting tool as well when entering discussions with a new subcontractor. If a potential partner refuses to put their terms in writing, it's a big red flag that working with them will be a poor choice.

Review Staffing and Resources

It's hard to work with a subcontractor if they don't have the resources or staff to keep up with the project's demands. Before entering into a partnership, every construction professional should take the time to review their subcontractor's staffing and resources. They should make sure they have enough people and the proper equipment to meet the project's needs.

A small crew isn't necessarily a deal-breaker unless previous work indicates they don't have the skills or experience to keep up. Each contractor should be assessed on a case-by-case basis.

View Previous Work

People say a picture is worth 1,000 words. Talking to subcontractors can only go so far, so construction managers should review their previous work either in person or in a portfolio. The company might look good on paper, but if their output doesn't match their descriptions, it's a good indicator that they're being dishonest.

On the other hand, viewing their previous projects can be a fantastic way to find a "diamond in the rough." This could be a subcontractor who might not have a ton of experience or references but has an organized body of work that speaks for itself.

Consider Prequalification

Many general contractors use prequalification to weed out casual applicants and help them find the best people in the industry to work with. Subcontractors must go through a prequalification process before they're ever allowed to bid for projects.

A prequalification process can include many of the vetting tips previously mentioned in this piece. That can make it easier to review new subcontractors because there won't be so many to sort through.

Finding a Subcontractor Is Hard Work

For every skilled and honest subcontractor out there, there are 10 scam artists trying to weed their way into an already competitive industry. A thorough vetting process gives general contractors the tools to protect their businesses and find the best companies in the industry to work with.

REQUEST FOR CBE SUBCONSULTANT INTEREST

AECOM is bidding on the following project as Prime Contractor:
Los Angeles County Public Works for

On-Call Environmental Documentation and Regulatory Permit Consultant Support Services
RFP Number: BRC0000201

Due Date: Thursday, August 11, 2020, 2pm

AECOM is seeking qualifications from Community Business Enterprises (CBEs) and other subcontractors for environmental documentation, regulatory permitting and the following work:

All subcontractor staff must have graduated from an accredited university with a major in urban and regional planning, environmental sciences, environmental management, environmental engineering, biological sciences, transportation planning, or other related major and have a minimum of 10 years' experience in a field described below:

- Preparation of CEQA/NEPA documentation
- Regulatory permitting services
- Preparation of public advertisements and notices required by CEQA/NEPA
- Preparation of technical environmental impact analysis and studies in the areas of traffic/transportation, air quality/greenhouse gas emissions, energy, biological resources, hydrology/water quality, cultural/paleontological resources, and noise and vibration
- Conducting public outreach and public meetings

Experience providing similar services for the County of Los Angeles, and/or specialists in CEQA/NEPA technical analyses and regulatory permitting are preferred. This proposal is in alignment with the County of Los Angeles's CBE Program requirements and certified CBEs are encouraged to respond.

AECOM intends to conduct itself in good faith in regards to all firms.

Interested businesses should email a brief overview of relevant experience listing any County of L.A. experience along with CBE documentation by August 3, 2020, to Shannon Ledet at shannon.ledet@aecom.com and Erica Moss at erica.moss@aecom.com.
