

ENR 2018 Top 400 Contractors: The Market Keeps on Rolling

Swinerton recently completed a 356,309-sq-ft expansion of the Sycuan Hotel and Casino in El Cajon, Calif. PHOTO COURTESY OF SWINERTON

By Gary J. Tulacz,

The construction market is cyclical. Executives at large U.S. contractors understand this and also understand that the current booming market will not last forever. However, despite the fact that this is one of the longest domestic upswings on record, few see signs that it will abate any time soon. So they are working hard now to take advantage of the opportunities available without losing sight of what the future may bring.

The domestic market was one of strong, steady growth for large contractors. This can be seen from the results of the ENR Top 400 Contractors survey. The Top 400, as a group, generated a record $373.98 billion in contracting revenue in 2017, an increase of 2.1% from 2016's $366.41 billion. However, the real story is on the domestic side. Contracting revenue from U.S. projects rose a healthy 4.9%, to $322.83 billion, on top of a 9.4% rise in domestic revenue last year and a 9.5% increase the year before. On the other hand, contracting revenue from projects outside the U.S. plunged 18.4%, to $35.55 billion, in 2017, with major declines noted in projects in the mining-and-metals and petroleum sectors and a falloff in the general building sector abroad.

Many contractors did not believe the market could continue to grow as long as it has, and few see any signs that this growth will taper off. "Two years ago, I said we were in the late innings of the construction boom. I am really glad I was wrong," says Dan McQuade, group president for construction at AECOM. He concedes that this is a cyclical industry and that he has been through three major market recessions. "But right now, we're bullish. We have our sights on $14 billion to $15 billion in projects coming up, and that could grow to as much as $20 billion if the economy holds up."

Many contractors are using the steady growth in the overall market to focus on what they do best, rather than scrambling for any opportunities that come along. "We project the markets we serve will continue to grow in the next several years, so our strategic plan does not include any new markets," says Larry Rooney, president of Manhattan Construction Group. However, he says the firm is increasing the scope of services it offers in its current markets.

Turner Construction is another contractor that is maintaining its focus on its primary markets.

Pat A. Di Filippo, executive vice president, says Turner's big markets, like health care, commercial, education and convention centers, are all busy. "We want to make sure first of all that we saturate those markets. We will not take people out of those sectors to chase work in other sectors. We have to make sure our credibility is based on the work we are doing now," he says.

Many contractors credit federal actions with boosting the markets. The recent federal tax cuts as well as measures taken to reduce the regulatory burden manufacturers face "are promising steps to level the playing field and move the U.S. economy forward," says Stephen Gray, CEO of Gray Construction.

"Two years ago, I said we were in the late innings of the construction boom. I am really glad I was wrong."

— Dan McQuade, Group President for construction, AECOM

Rufus Judson, CEO of The Pike Companies, agrees with Gray. However, he cautions that now is the time to take advantage of these federal actions. "With the tax cuts and deregulation, we hope to see an increase in manufacturing throughout the Northeast. Interest rates are going to go up, thus companies should build now rather than in the future."

There are a few local bumps in the road for some contractors. On the West Coast, there is the reduction in Chinese foreign investment, and that will have a significant impact on some markets, as Chinese investors have been putting a lot of debt and equity into these real estate investments. "Because international money is backing out, a lot of projects have slowed down or aren't able to get financed," says Jeff Hoopes, CEO of Swinerton. He sees a drop-off in the overall market for multifamily, hotels, and condominiums "beginning to happen in San Francisco, and we'll see that in Los Angeles and Seattle within the next year."

Waiting for an International Recovery

One market that has been struggling is the upstream petroleum market. The drop in oil prices at the end of 2014 and its slow climb over the past three years have stalled the petroleum sector, the biggest international contracting market. However, with oil prices now topping $70/bbl, some believe that the stagnant petroleum market is poised for a rebound.

Not everyone believes the rise in oil prices will cause a quick turnaround. "Our customers are encouraged by the rise in oil prices, but I can't say they are changing their capital expenditure plans right now," says Jack Futcher, president and chief operating officer of Bechtel. He says that oil companies are still basing their plans on a $40-$50/bbl price target. "Our customers in that sector are conservative in their plans, and they still see some volatility in the market," he says.

One international sector that may be turning around is mining. "Copper prices have finally started to come back," says Futcher of Bechtel. He says Bechtel has been particularly well positioned in that market, based on its range of skills. For example, in Chile, the government placed strict limits on how much water copper producers can draw from local aquifers. "Our infrastructure experience allowed us to package not just the copper concentrators, but also the desalination plants and pipelines to pipe water to those concentrators," Futcher says.

One issue that has many U.S.-based international contractors worried is the continuing political pressure against the Export-Import Bank of the U.S. The Ex-Im Bank's role in providing international loans to finance the purchase of U.S. goods and services has been severely cut as political opposition has blocked confirmation of nominees to the bank's board, limiting the amount it can lend. This has hurt some U.S. contractors' opportunities against contractors from other countries, such as China, that have more active export credit agencies.

The notion that Ex-Im Bank loans are corporate welfare is inaccurate," Futcher says. The government earns interest on loans to finance international projects, and U.S. contractors hired to work on these projects are likely to specify U.S.-made products to execute the projects, he says. "The Ex-Im Bank levels the playing field for U.S. contractors."

While the international market for oil and gas projects may be soft, the domestic market is doing well. "We see improved market conditions in the LNG [liquefied natural gas] and petrochemical business, along with increased construction activities along the gulf coast in the second half of 2018 and leading into 2019-20," says Farhan Mujib, president, engineering and construction, Americas, for KBR.

However, Mujib sees some problems with competition. Risk appetite has increased among contractors due to the soft market. "This will continue until the workload stabilizes, and then the contractors will start pushing back on risk and also seek improved margins," he says.

One major driver in the domestic industrial sector is the continuing low prices for shale oil and gas in the U.S. "We see many opportunities in the LNG sector for such projects as ethane crackers and polyethylene production," says Futcher.

There have been several announcements of new domestic petrochemical projects recently that confirm Futcher's claim. For example, Exxon Mobil and Saudi Basic Industries Corp. announced on May 1 plans to build a 1.8-million-ton ethane cracker in San Patricio County, Texas (see p. 20). Further, Formosa Petrochemical Corp. filed permits on April 23 to begin building a $9.4-billion chemical manufacturing complex in St. James Parish, La.

Low U.S. gas prices already have had an impact on LNG export facilities. For example, Bechtel has completed four LNG export trains and is working on a fifth for Cheniere Energy at Sabine Pass, Texas, and is working on two greenfield LNG trains in Corpus Christi, Texas. "Cheniere is now looking to add a third train in Corpus Christi," Futcher says.

Intense Competition

One surprising element in the domestic contracting market is the high level of competition. Despite the amount of opportunities available, many contractors complain that the competition has not slacked off. "Competition is still robust and contractors are still taking an aggressive approach to quoting fees," says Mark Luegering, COO at Messer Construction Co. He says to compete successfully, firms must be able to deliver more value-added services to their clients. "You can't just compete on fees."

The level of competition also is affecting fees. "Although our markets are very busy, competition remains tight with pressure on fees and our CM services or our professional services contracts. We also see new upstart companies entering our active markets, looking to establish themselves via below-market compensation," says Robert W. Mullen, CEO of Structure Tone.

Some contractors say large firms are in a rush to hit revenue and growth targets. "A rise in mergers and acquisitions has prompted the larger firms to pursue more and more projects, in an effort to achieve greater market share and revenue," says Ashok Patel, CEO of OHL North America.

But there also is a fear that the market will not last and now is the time to build up backlog. As a result, some contractors are bidding on work without regard to their ability to execute the projects. "People in this business have to understand their own capacity and should not over-commit. Contracting is not about getting lots of work but about understanding your skill sets and ability to execute," says Di Filippo of Turner.

The workforce shortage in construction currently is an issue and it will continue to get worse. Some experts predict that the shortfall in the industry may reach two million workers by 2020. This has left contractors scrambling to ensure their work will be adequately staffed.

Finding People

Demand for manpower and resources is outstripping capacity across the board, especially on complex projects. "Cost escalation can exceed 10% in specific trades. This trend is intensifying and will probably be a factor over the next 24 months," says Steven F. Matt, CEO of Matt Construction. He says subcontractors are beginning to avoid smaller and complicated jobs to conserve their resources for the most productive projects.
