McHugh Construction To Pay $12M Fine as Part of Federal Probe

One of Chicago's most clout-heavy construction companies has agreed to pay more than $12 million in penalties after it was snared in a federal probe into whether a woman-owned business was really an illegal front to win government contracts.

After a more than two-year investigation by the U.S. Attorney's Office, McHugh Construction has agreed to pay $12 million in fines -- $7.2 million to the federal government and $4.8 million to the state.

McHugh, which admitted no wrongdoing under the settlement, will pay an additional $1.2 million to the law firm representing the project manager who filed the claim.

The investigation came to light in February 2012 when federal prosecutors unsealed charges against Willowbrook construction firm owner Elizabeth Perino for acting as a "sham pass-through" subcontractor involved the reconstruction of the North Avenue bridge and Wacker Drive as well as work on the Red and Brown lines, all projects in which McHugh acted as prime contractor.

According to the charges, Perino submitted bills for work her companies did not perform, allowing McHugh, identified in a criminal complaint only as "Prime Contractor A" in the charges, to meet its requirements for hiring disadvantaged businesses.

The charges are pending against Perino, 59.

After the settlement with McHugh was announced today, the company's chairman issued a statement saying they were "pleased we were able to reach a successful resolution with the government and put this matter behind us."

"Over the last 26 months, we have not only cooperated fully with the government, but we have taken proactive steps to become an industry leader in (minority and women-owned business) compliance issues," Patricia McHugh said in the statement.

"We now look forward to moving ahead with the dozens of public and private sector projects we are engaged in, while also continuing our longstanding commitment to improving opportunities for disadvantaged businesses in Chicago," she said.

McHugh reported $513 million in revenues last year and has 600 employees, business records show.

About McHugh

Since its founding, James McHugh Construction Co. has earned its reputation as a builder of landmark, one-of-a-kind structures. McHugh's success is grounded in the company's dedication to the success of its clients, its people, and the McHugh heritage. McHugh's mission has always been promoting a seamless and positive project experience with excellence and innovation.

The company was founded in 1897 by James D. McHugh and by the 1920s was established as a general contractor noted for its elaborate masonry work. As it grew with the city, McHugh developed its specialties: high-rise concrete construction and complex, large-scale projects for both the private and public sectors.

McHugh's leadership applies to its people as well as its structures. The company was the first in Chicago to bring minorities into the ironworkers' union and first to enter a joint venture with a minority contractor. It is not uncommon for laborers to move up the ladder through the organization; conversely, almost every corporate employee has spent time working in the field.

With a rich tradition of excellence, innovation and commitment to people, McHugh will continue to be a leader in the construction industry.
