

Javits Center Project Invites Diversity Firms

By Leslie McMillan

New York is a city where great visions fulfilled on the grandest scale seem almost commonplace. It is also a city where tangible support for small business participation in massive public projects is a really big deal.

Consider the current $1.5 billion expansion project that will add another 1.2 million square feet to the Jacob K. Javits Convention Center in Manhattan. Already the nation's busiest convention venue, the Javits Center recently concluded a major renovation of its existing facility, then followed up by breaking ground in 2017 on the enormous addition slated for completion in 2021. World-class design-build team Lendlease Turner Joint Venture won the expansion contract—and is actively seeking first-tier subcontractor participation from among firms owned by minorities, women, or service-disabled veterans (MWBE or SDVOB).

Certified MWBE or SDVOB firms are invited to register with Lendlease Turner JV for notices of first-tier subcontractor or supplier opportunities on the Javits Center expansion project. Visit <https://goo.gl/forms/jC7qTF9Npi4WLIL03> to complete the short LLTJV vendor registration form. To obtain or update MWBE or SDVOB certification, or to learn more about eligibility and the certification process, visit the New York State Empire State Development website at <https://esd.ny.gov/mwbe-new-certification>. Please also see the Lendlease Turner JV ad posted below.

The state-of-the-art Javits Center expansion, rendering a fivefold increase in meeting room space, includes such elements as:

- 93,000 square feet of permanent exhibit space, to be combined with current exhibit space, to create an approximately 500,000-square-foot exhibition hall
- 113,000 square feet of pre-function space
- 107,000 square feet of new meeting room space
- 53,000-square-foot special event space
- A green roof terrace and pavilion sized to accommodate 1,500 people for outdoor events
- One-acre rooftop farm
- 27 new loading docks

• An on-site facility with room for more than 230 trucks related to events and exhibits
Progress on the expansion project is on time and on budget. The foundation work is completed, and steel structure is being erected. Construction
